NUNS AS PRINTERS.

Printing Office For Convent Home of Sisters of Holy Child Jesus.

Who would ever suspect that a complete printing and publishing house was contained in the convent home of the Sisters of the Holy Child Jesus, a beautiful retreat at Sharon Hill, Delaware county, Pa.? No ordinary establishment for the cultivation of the art preservative of arts is this convent printery. No commonplace type of type works there. Instead of the familiar ink stained expert of the stick the positions at the frames are occupied by grave looking sisters who deftly pick up the type with fingers that are barely visible because of the enveloping folds of the wide sleeved habit of the order.

The faces of the women who work at the cases are almost hidden beneath the big black veils, and as they bend back and forth in reaching for the type the crucifixes at their waists swing in rhythm to the movement. At the lin posting table other black veiled sisters are busy making up forms and correcting mistakes, while in one corner a black robed figure is feeding a press run by a small engine.

There is no typesetting machine in this printing office. There is no need for one. In the gray old building rooted in a quiet park, far from the rush of commercial life, the nuns are serenely indifferent to the demands of the age for time saving devices that cultivate speed at the expense of workmanship. They have plenty of time, and they aim to do work that will be artistic and perfect in appearance.

As in mediaeval times, the monks and nuns preserved arts that the indifferent world outside the walls would have permitted to fall into disuse, so these sisters of Sharon Hill will probably be the means of perpetuating the finest features of the art of printing, which are falling more and more into disuse in this bustling age. As the sisters teach school and the artists who have charge of the printery take a pride in imparting their knowledge to the larger girls who come to the convent for educational instruction, it is likely that from this typographical establishment there will come students who will in turn spread the knowledge acquired and so keep alive the most beautiful examples of the art.

What is Happiness?
"What is happiness?" asks James Bryce in the Atlantic. "Is it pleasure, and, if so, what is pleasure? Aristotle gave us a definition of pleasure, or, rather, perhaps a description, since the legislators say that you cannot define an ultimate fact which has not been much improved upon. It is not, however, psychological definitions that need concern us, but rather this question, which occupied the utilitarian school seventy years ago, whether the pleasures taken in the aggregate as constituting happiness are to be subjected to a qualitative as well as a quantitative analysis. Shall we measure them by the intensity by which they are felt or by the fitness and elevation of the feeling to which they appeal? Is the satisfaction which Paradise felt in watching the performance of a drama of Sophocles at an Athenian festival greater or less than the satisfaction which one of his slaves felt in obtaining a jar of wine?"

Lungs That Are Starved.
It is a fact that most of us are victims of our own lazy respiration and deprive ourselves of oxygen that is so necessary if we would keep our bodies at their highest point of efficiency. Oxygen is absolutely necessary to the existence of animal life. Man gets oxygen from air breathed into his lungs. Besides introducing oxygen into the blood, the lungs act as excretory organs, removing undesirable elements from the system at each expiration. In ordinary or unconscious breathing only 10 to 15 per cent of the air in the lungs is changed at each breath, leaving 80 to 90 per cent of the lung capacity filled with stale air. Forced or conscious breathing of pure air ventilates the lungs, driving out the 80 to 90 per cent of the stationary or stale air. All bedroom windows and doors should be wide open during sleep, thus connecting the lungs directly with pure air of the outside world.—Delincoeur.
