Some people are honest in spite of themselves, and others are honest in spite of the rascals.

When you are no better than you have to be you are no better than you should be.

There is nobody more apt to make a mistake than the cocksure man.

A self satisfied individual doesn't need any guardian angel, for nothing can reach him to harm him.

The callouses on the hands of some of our friends were undoubtedly made by the handles of their little hammers.

When we aren't really ourselves the chances are that his astute majesty can throw more light upon who we are than anybody else can.

When the really large things of life show up no bigger than a ham sandwich the chances are that you are hungry and don't see the sandwich.

There is no use in a quarrel, but some people seem to get a lot of fun out of it.

Everybody is always taking a good sound whack at the fellow who is always afraid of getting hurt.

Most of us are always willing to look at the best side of an untoward thing, but are too often unable to find it.

When Close at Home. Graft doesn't seem exactly wrong to those who profit by it. They call it by another name. And by that means deny it. And they regard plain spoken men as cruel and unfeeling. Who do not best about the bush, but speak of it as stealing.

A little rascally on the side is not to them a matter. That calls for any loud remarks or gossip' idle chatter. If any one comes butting in. They ask him to forget it. They need the money, and this seems an easy way to get it.

Their salary is small enough. And padding comes in handy. To get the things they need at home. And buy the children candy. And if their conscience ever pricks. They tell it to be quiet. Or they may have to get along on a more modest diet.

And then they see a host of men. Whose wealth would never stand the test. If carefully inspected. And so their modest little graft. Don't bother them a minute. In fact, they're only sure because. There are not millions in it.

Time Attachment.

"What are you laughing at so uproariously?"
"I heard a joke yesterday and I just now saw the point of it."
"For goodness' sake don't tell it to me. I have to go to a funeral tomorrow."

Dangers of a Diary. The Tichborne claimant, Arthur Goss, kept a diary in the days when he also kept a bush public house in the back blocks of Australia and meddled between drinks on the best way to secure for himself the Tichborne estate. In it during a momentary fit of aberration he scribbled the following famous words: "Some men have plenty of brains and no money, and some men have plenty of money and no brains. Surely men with plenty of money and no brains were made for men with plenty of brains and no money." This came into the possession of the Tichborne claimant, who obtained it from a cut-throat named Cox, and its production in court sealed his fate.—Tit-Bits.
