REGULATING THE SALOONS

On Wednesday morning the new ordinance in Salem went into effect requiring that all saloon fronts shall be opened in such a manner that people walking along the sidewalk may have a full and uninterrupted view of the barroom. Previous to this many of the saloons had complied with the law, a few of them having opened their fronts two weeks ago. The new ordinance also prohibits the use of boxes in the saloons and forbids the sale of liquor in the restricted district. The success of this new ordinance will be watched with interest throughout the state, as many of those most familiar with the saloon question believe this is the only way the saloons can be successfully regulated.

The wettest town in the United States is said to be the new village, of Benbow City, in Illinois, which has grown up around the Standard Oil Company's new refinery. It has 18 registered voters and 23 saloons. In addition to the 23 saloons, there are seven brewery agencies, and each dramshop and each agency pays $500 a year license. Payments for the coming year have already been made and the little village starts out with a $15,000 nest egg. The 18 voters will meet soon to decide how to spend the money which they have received for licenses.

At a conference between the the leaders of the house and senate it was practically agreed that Congress shall adjourn Friday May 22. The senate passed the agricultural bill carrying an appropriation aggregating $12,142,157. For building roads and making other permanent improvements in the national forest $1,000,000, instead of 500,000, as provided by the house of representatives, was appropriated, giving one-half the amount asked by the chief forester.

Twenty seven states have declared in favor of popular election of federal senators, and Senator Owen, of Oklahoma declares that of the 19 remaining, two-thirds are ready to do so. If four or five more state legislatures should join the 27 in petitioning Congress for an amendment to the constitution, that body would be forced to submit the amendment to the people for ratification or rejection.

The Senate committee on finance has unanimously agreed to report the bill already passed by the House providing for the permanent restoration of the words "In God We Trust" to gold and silver coins of the United States. The motto was directed to be omitted from the coins by order of the President.

A favorable report was made to the House on Representative Humphreys' bill appropriating $50,000 for the erection of monuments along the old Oregon trail. The bill authorizes the employment of a commission to erect the monuments at an annual salary of not over $2500.

Because a patent medicine concern published her picture and a testimonial which she said she did not give, Miss Frances Wynne, a saleswoman in a New York department store, has recovered $3,000 damages.

A ROSE BY ANY OTHER NAME

By J. LUDLUM LEE

Any true musician knows what a trial it is to practice Chopin's "Fifth Nocturne" while a hand organ on the street is grinding out "Way Down In Honolulu" and the piano in the cottage next door is peddling out "The Merry Widow" waltz. Norah McCue knew what it meant, for she had been attempting such a miracle for the last hour, each bar of music interspersed with certain pertinent expressions which her mother would have termed "shocking."

The doorbell rang sharply, and as Norah rose to answer it she gave a discordant pound upon the keys as if to illustrate her mood.

"Any of youse White?" he managed to say between the vigorous movements of the jaws.

"White! Of course we're white."

"MICK, YOU AND I HAVE DISCOVERED A WONDERFUL THING."

"What's your name?" queried the boy as he began to fumble in his pocket for a letter.

"My name is McCue," said Norah, somewhat curtly.

"What is it you want, boy?" she demanded.

"I'm lookin' for a gent named White. That's what I want. Does he live here or don't he?"

"Certainly he does not," Norah assured him. "My name is McCue, and I live here with my mother--no one else. Do you understand, you stupid little!"

"She stopped abruptly. The boy had begun to sing the same air with words: 'Huge McCue, you mick, you; You mick, you.'"

This was too much! Norah slammed the door with great force. It was useless to even attempt to practice now. Her brain was in a whirl of emotions. Ever since last night, when she had quarreled with Josh, things had gone wrong. She would go out and sit in the old apple tree and fight it out with herself. She would climb to her favorite branch and write out that musical exercise for the professor. With a few blank sheets of paper under her arm and clad in a very smart white sweater, she emerged from the side door, sauntered around the yard of the house and climbed up the old ladder that leaned against the apple tree.

She was comfortably seated on one of the upper branches when she again caught distinctly those familiar strains of "Huge McCue," this time whistled.

"If that impudent boy has come back again I'll!" But Norah got no further in her one-sided conversation. Instead of a messenger boy appeared a tall, strapping youth, pipe in mouth, a stiff walking stick in hand, followed by a sprightly little Irish terrier. He had stopped and was talking to his companion.

"Mick, you old boy," said the man, "you see that ladder over there. Well, I'm going to smash it in forty pieces. If there is anything I hate it is a silent reminder of things that might have been and happy days gone by."

Mick gave assent by a sharp bark as the man strode up and gave the ladder a vigorous kick.

"How dare you?" came from behind the screen of soft green leaves and pale pink bloom.

The dog pricked up his ears, and the man simulated amazement.

"Mick," he proceeded, "you and I have discovered a wonderful thing--a talking tree."

Mick wagged his tail.

"Brute!" came from the skies above.

"The tree is now addressing you, my dear Mick."

Mick gave several delighted yelps, ran up and down the yard and started around the corner.

"Here, Mick, you," cried his master. "Come back here! I want to talk to you." Then he whistled, and the tune was that of--

"Huge McCue, you, mick, you; You mick, you."

"I did not choose my name, and I wouldn't take advantage of a woman if I were a great big man," wailed a voice in the tree.

The man curled up at the foot of the tree and leisurely shook the ashes from his pipe and proceeded to refill it.

"What do you think of that, Mick?" he went on. "Here we have found a wonderfully beautiful tree--it must be a lady tree 'cause it can talk--you know ladies can talk, Mick, and sometimes they can say, oh, such nasty things. Well, this tree doesn't care for her name. I don't see that a name matters much. Poets have been fighting that out for years--'What's in a name' and 'A rose by any other name' and all that sort of rot."

Mick's little eyes seemed to search those of his master.
