The Case of Jones.

(Copyright)

Jones at the age of twenty-eight was a mechanic and working every day at fair wages and happy to work. A year later he married. A year later still he lost his wife and babe as the former became a mother. Then he got into trouble with his union for working overtime, was expelled from the society, and during the next year it was a bitter fight with him against odds. The shops turned him down, his health became poor; there were more laborers than there were picks and shovels. He was carrying in a ton of coal now and then or carrying out a ton of ashes when he got in the way of a street car. He wasn't killed. Indeed, he wasn't badly hurt, but a policeman took it as a bit of impudence on his part to interrupt traffic and he was collared and sent up for thirty days. In one sense the imprisonment was a great relief to Jones. He got something to eat and got it regularly. When night came he got a fairly comfortable bed. In another sense he felt degraded. His keepers and most of the other prisoners would have laughed at the idea, but it was nevertheless true. He had made a good fight for it and had been downed through no fault of his own, and he had done nothing to deserve imprisonment. It humiliated and embittered him, and when his sentence had been served he had lost his self respect and had a feeling that the world was against him.

From that day Jones became a hobo. He tramped without any particular aim except wanting to get somewhere. When he went among the farmers the usual thing was to set the dog on him as soon as he entered the gate or climbed the fence. If there was no dog, then the farmer came forward to give the hobo the boot. For every one farmer who fed and lodged him fifteen turned him away. The latter thought it necessary to call him names and threaten him and make him feel his position. The former demanded that he pay five times the value of the food in work, and when he got ready to move along they insisted on searching him to make sure that he wasn't carrying off a plow or the contents of the granary. Now and then, at long intervals, Jones met a human being, man or woman. They talked to him as one human being talks to another, and for an hour after he would feel himself again a man. Then along would come a country constable to run him in on suspicion of having stolen a wagon load of wheat or potatoes and abuse him because the proofs were lacking.

For five years Jones wandered over the face of the earth. In that time he met more people and saw more of human nature than the ordinary man would see in living two lifetimes. In particular he saw the littleness of his fellow men. He discovered that for every broad minded man there were a thousand with pinched and contracted souls. He heard gossip and scandal and lying. He saw the injustice of man to man. He saw so little that was good and so much to condemn that, hobo as he was, he became disgusted and no longer wondered why hogs crowded each other at the trough. One day he picked up an old newspaper on the highway and sat down and read, among other things, that a certain philanthropic old lady had founded and endowed a home for the ailing and indigent. Jones had known for a year past that he was a victim of consumption, and that his tramping days were drawing to a close. Sometimes as he lay under a tree and thought of it he reasoned that the roadside ditch was good enough for a tramp to die in. Again, there would come a longing to have human beings about him when the end came, to die under a roof, to die in his bed, even to have to talk with a minister before the lamp flickered out.

A month later Jones was asking for admission to the home. He was then a human wreck, and his days were numbered. Yes, they took him in, but the attendant in his ward gave him warning that if he made any trouble he'd get the bounce. The same attendant asked him in the frankest manner why he didn't die somewhere in a snowdrift instead of coming among his betters. The doctor didn't look him over. He said there was no need of that. Any one with ears on had only to listen to that racking cough. His excellency the doctor further remarked that there was no need of wasting good chicken broth and port wine on that case and that he supposed there was a coffin in the basement to fit. The nurses in that ward had a great deal of gossiping and very little nursing to do. At first Jones wanted this and that and even dared to call out at night and awaken the sleeping nurse, but after a few days, after he had been talked to a few times, he learned better. One day when he asked for the minister he was laughed at. They did finally bring him a Testament, but by that time his eyes were too weak to read the fine print. He realized that the end was near, but was clinging to life as even a hobo will when he heard the nurse complaining of his base ingratitude. She argued that he ought to have died a week before and that his hanging on the way he did showed a selfish obstinacy.

Jones figured it out that the nurse couldn't very well poison him off or choke him to death without attracting suspicion, and that night as she slept, after warning him not to call out, he gave up the fight, and his soul passed on to its Maker. Exit workman, husband, wife, child—Jones. And the world rolled on as if they had never been.

OTHER PEOPLE'S THRONES.

Countries Ruled by Monarchs Same People Think Are Usurpers.

The German emperor, whose occupation of the German throne is said to have been the outcome of a "good commercial speculation," is thought by many to be heir to the throne of England, he being the eldest child of the eldest child of the late Queen Victoria.

The king of Italy sits on some one else's throne. The father of the present king ascended the throne of Sardinia as the descendant of an ambitious man of the Alexander type of conquering hero. He was a man of title in the little kingdom of Savoy, being one of its dukes. Spain, without asking the people, gave this man Amadeus the throne of Sicily.

Five years afterward Amadeus thought that as Sardinia was a larger place than Sicily it would be all the better if he ruled it, and, having put the matter in the hands of Germany, Charles VI, at once agreed with Amadeus that Sardinia should be his.

Amadeus, therefore, under the protection of the Emperor Charles, proceeded to Sardinia, where his progress, a very royal one, was from fear allowed full scope. The road to the throne was accomplished in double quick time, and as a reward Amadeus gave Charles Sicily.

This occurred only a century and a half ago, and the lineal descendant of Amadeus is the present Victor Emmanuel III. of Italy.

The king of Greece is a Dane, as every one knows. To make room for George I. of the Hellenes, Otho, the then ruler of Greece and a Bavarian by birth and parentage, was deposed and King Christian's son put on the throne in 1832.

It came about through a civil war, or, more strictly speaking, an insurrection, during which the lives of the reigning king and queen were sought. But the monarchs escaped unhurt. The insurgents thereupon proclaimed Prince Alfred, the late Duke of Edinburgh, who reigned over Saxo-Coburg, as king, but the young prince refused the throne—Stray Stories.

Stoutness and Song.

In previous verses and fitness go together. They certainly seem to do so to a man up a tree. What is the cause of this comradeship? Tetrazzini is as plump as a partridge. Nordie is an apple dumpling. Meiba is magnificently bulbous. Calve is real peach jelly in a crystallized. Caruso is as fat as a porpoise. Schumann-Helich is a delicious armful. Numblich is not a lath by any means. Lehmann made a burton and insoucious Bruschid. Both the De Reskes are big, heavy men. Brignoll was a giant. Eames is more bulbous than Jono Javed to be. In her prime Patti was a little sawed off woman of beautiful flesh. Fremstad is no hatterck. Kirkby-Linn is a goodly lump to look upon. Geradine Farrar is no slim girl of good looks. Garden is like a full blown rose. De Cisneros looks like a jolly fat Dutch girl with a forty-five inch waist. Among the men the tenors are fat as a rule. The basses are tall and lean.—New York Press.

Candy For the Battleships.

Many thousands of pounds of high grade bonbons were supplied to the vessels of Admiral Evans' fleet on the long cruise to the Pacific. The attitude toward candy has changed of late years. It is no longer thought childish or effeminate to eat bonbons. The medical corps of both services recommends sweets to the men, and the commissary makes it easy for them to get the best. Pure candy and especially chocolate bonbons of high grade are said to lessen the appetite for strong drink and form one of the best and most nutritious energy producing foods known. They are especially recommended for consumption in hot countries. When the army of occupation in the Philippines was larger than it now is many large shipments of good candy were made to Manila.

Brazilian Boat of Bronze.

Owing to the great amount of decomposed vegetable matter contained in Brazilian waters, which causes rapid deterioration of thin steel, the hull of the new dispatch boat Guanabara, built for the Brazilian government, is constructed entirely of bronze. Against this metal, says Popular Mechanics, the corrosive action of the Brazilian waters has no effect, and, although more costly both in material and construction, the vessel is much lighter than if built of steel or wood. The propeller shafting and propeller are also of bronze.

A Wicker Lifeboat.

C. J. de Vos, the Dutch inventor, of Rotterdam has recently patented a wicker lifeboat that has withstood unusually rough tests in a heavy sea. With the exception of the ribs and seats the boat is made entirely of water-tight wicker. It is absolutely unshakable and can stand five times as much pounding as the wooden or steel lifeboats. It does not look inviting, but it rides the seas beautifully and has a greater capacity for passengers and provisions than the other heavier boats.

Polite Dogs.

A school for dogs has been established in Paris. The object is to teach them politeness. The animals are trained to welcome visitors by jumping up, wagging the tail and giving a low bark. When the visitor leaves the dog accompanies him to the door, constantly wagging his tail, and bows his farewell by bending his head to the floor. He is trained likewise to pick up a handkerchief, glove or fan that has been dropped and return it to the owner.
