Public Cooking.
 To buy one's own fowl or joint and watch it being roasted at a public "rotisserie" at the rate of 5 cents a pound is a privilege possible for New Yorkers to enjoy. This method has all the elements of novelty to attract the inhabitants of bachelor apartments and the young couples playing at light housekeeping in limited quarters. Capon, quail and sweetbreads may be cooked here without fear of exchange for an inferior article, as the suspicious housekeeper is invited to sit down and watch her purchase being roasted on the automatically revolving spit. When done to a turn her property is delivered to her in a neat box, which she tucks under her arm.—New York Sun.

The Red Headed Policeman

[Copyright, 1908.]
 One day as the red headed policeman was pacing his beat in a certain American city of 100,000 inhabitants a woman called to him from the steps of a house and reported that soon after daylight that morning, just as she had awoke and was making ready to get up, she had been frightened half to death by the sight of a large monkey at the open window. She had screamed out, and the animal had fled. Later in the day she had seen the monkey frisking about on the roof of the shed attached to the house next door, into which a stranger, who was evidently a foreigner, had moved three or four days before. He was a man of middle age, and there was an old woman with him, probably to act as housekeeper.

"And I'm asking you, sir," continued the woman as she raised her hand and waved it to and fro, "if it's the law in America that a foreigner and an old woman and a rascally monkey can move in next door to a respectable widow woman, who has paid taxes for the last fifteen years, leaving the monkey to run at large and scare people out of their seven senses?"
 "It's an Italian, ma'am, who is your new neighbor," answered the policeman. "I was jabbering with him the day he rented the house."
 "Then he's in the hand organ business?"
 "Then he's not, ma'am. He's in the count business. He's had to fly from his own sunny skies to save his life. You ought to be proud that you have a live count living next door."
 Three or four days later the police heard at the station to which he was attached of a bold burglary in the neighborhood. A burglar had entered by a second story window and made a haul of money and jewelry, and no clew had been left behind. This burglary was followed by another within twenty-four hours, and then came what the police and press called a "wave" of crime, though it was strictly confined to despoiling private residences. In some cases it was impossible to tell how entrance had been effected. In others it was plain that an open window was the route.

Of course the detectives investigated, and of course when no arrests followed they got a roasting in the newspapers. It reached the point where the chief of police was asked to resign as a man utterly unfitted for the place. In return he bounced two of his detectives because they could not pick up clews where no clews had been left. Then the red headed policeman sat down to do some thinking. He thought of many a thing before he followed the line down to the widow who had told him about the monkey.
 Then he began to scratch that red hair and think the harder and finally decided to take a walk around on Sands street and see if the count still occupied the house. He reached the house of the widow first. Again she was standing on the steps. At sight of him she descended to the walk and said:

"So it's you, is it? I've been waiting a whole week to ask you if it's the habits of monkeys to go to bed like honest folks at night and get up at a reasonable hour in the morning or whether they are philandering all over town after midnight and coming home any time before daylight."
 "In the wilds of Africa, ma'am," began the officer, but was interrupted with:
 "But these are not the wilds of Africa. I've been doing some watching for these last few moonlight nights. I didn't know but the Black Hand would be coming for the count next door. I've seen the monkey come and go half a dozen times. He comes and goes by way of the shed roof."
 "And what of it, ma'am—what of it?" asked the officer.
 "I can't say, sir, but it's a matter that bothers me. I thought I'd speak of it and let it bother you."
 It did bother the red headed policeman for the next hour. Then he consulted with his superiors, and as a result two detectives were sent to interview the count. They didn't succeed in their purpose. He and the old woman had skipped out in a hurry an hour before their arrival. People who had seen them go said that they had no monkey along with them. In fact, the animal was discovered on the roof in the sunshine and fast asleep, but escaped capture. It was felt certain that he was the mysterious burglar, and a watch was set on the premises. He came not back, while during the next ten nights there was a burglary every night to mix things up again. Then a boy solved the whole case.

Two blocks distant from where the count had lived an old toment had retired to a stable to die in peace. In his wanderings the monkey had come across him and, being full of sentiment, had sought to make the feline's last hours pleasant ones. He had continued to rob and plunder as before, but had deposited everything beside old Tom and was a mourner there when discovered and shot by the red headed officer. More that $3,000 worth of stuff was found right there, and, leaving the respectable widow entirely out of it, the officer took on a new and prouder look as he said to himself:

"It pays for a policeman to have thoughts. If I hadn't had 'em this thing would never have happened, and it might have been twenty years before they made me a roundsman."

Wealth of New York City.
 The assessed value of land alone, exclusive of improvements, in the city of New York is greater than the assessed value of all the real estate. Improvements included, in the state of Pennsylvania and nearly twice as great as the value of all the real estate. Improvements included, in the state of New York outside of the city. The assessed valuation of land for six square miles of Manhattan in the neighborhood of Central park is greater than the assessed value of all the real estate in the state of Missouri.—New York American.

Doctored Tea.
 The tea importers are asking that the inspection of tea be transferred from the treasury to the agricultural department, on the ground apparently that the scientific experts of the latter will be better able to detect and stop fraudulent practices. Cheap teas, they say, are frequently adulterated with indigo and talc to make them resemble better grades, and these adulterants are said to be unwholesome.—New York Globe.

Hired to Bark Like Dogs.
 Because dog owners evade the dog tax by denying they own the animals, revenue authorities have engaged men who can imitate a dog bark. These men promenade the streets at night and bark outside of suspected houses. If a dog is within it invariably replies, thus betraying its owner. The next day a collector gathers the tax. The human barkers get $30 a month.—Paris Cor. Philadelphia North American.

SELLING CLOTHING.
 Old Time Ways and These of the Present Day—Traveling Model.
 Time was when the traveling salesman for a wholesale manufacturer of men's clothing carried with him on the road as many as fifteen or twenty trunks containing made up samples. In those days he took along with him an expert packer from the factory to unpack the trunks when they hit a town and to pack them in readiness for the next jump.
 The present day traveler for a wholesale manufacturer of men's high grade clothing carries with him just two sample trunks, one a wardrobe trunk and the other what is called a swatch trunk. In the wardrobe trunk he carries suspended on suitable hangers fifteen or twenty made up suits. Carried thus, these sample garments keep in good condition and show for what they are and to the best advantage.
 In the swatch trunk the salesman carries samples of all the other fabrics that his concern is making up. Swatch is a trade name for a sample cloth 9 by 12 inches. Of swatches the salesman may carry hundreds, and he carries besides some scores of ends of cloth, an end being a long piece cut off the entire width of the cloth.
 Of swatches and ends the salesman has a trunkful, and with fifteen or twenty made up suits to show styles and workmanship and those samples to show fabrics he can show goods to better advantage than from a bewildering assortment of hundreds of made up suits.
 Of course the man on the road with clothing does not in these circumstances require a packer, but the present day traveler for a concern making only high grade clothing does take with him a model on whom to exhibit clothes for the better display of the made up sample garments he carries and to show just how they will look when worn.
 What is considered the standard model in the clothing trade is a man five feet eight inches in height, thirty-six inches chest measure and thirty-two inches waist. He must of course be well built and otherwise of correct proportions. If a model five feet nine inches in height were required he would need to be thirty-seven inches chest measure and thirty-three waist. The model must be young or comparatively young. He does not need to be handsome, but he must be of good bearing, of intelligence and of good sense.
 If the salesman is an able man and the model himself is a man with ability in him, then by observation and experience the model absorbs and develops the art of salesmanship, and he may become a salesman himself and come to have a model to try on clothing for him.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.
