A THOUGHTFUL HUSBAND.
 Roses, Red Roses, and 'Twas Dr. and Mrs. Jason's Wedding Anniversary.
 "Well, well! What does all this mean?" Brown nodded toward the large bunch of gorgeous roses that lay on the table in the doctor's office. Brown and Dr. Jason were friends enough to allow of their relations being free and easy.
 "I, P. A. replied the doctor, coming in and shaking hands.
 "I, P. J. What does that stand for?" "Grateful patient."
 "Oh, yes, of course," Brown looked across at the doctor quizzically and added, "A lady, I presume?"
 The doctor was a married man, but he was a favorite among the fair sex. His wife was aware of it, too, but not approvingly so. In fact, it was common gossip among their friends that she did not view the numerous visits of Dr. Jason's feminine patients to his office with anything like complacency.
 "Yes, a lady," answered the doctor.
 "A story behind it, I suppose?" commented Brown.
 "Yes, in a way," said the doctor. "She was my patient several years ago. She lives out of town now, but every time she visits the city she never fails to send around a bunch of these roses."
 "Um," said Brown.
 "She is simply showing her gratitude, and then the roses add a decorative touch to the office, you know," explained the doctor.
 "Um," said Brown. "Mrs. Jason is pleased to have your work appreciated in this way, I have no doubt."
 "Oh, yes; oh, yes," said the doctor hastily. "But, say, old chap," he said, placing his hand confidentially on Brown's sleeve, "I wouldn't bring up the subject when you come around to the house, you know."
 At this moment a step was heard outside the office door, and it opened to reveal Mrs. Jason. She swept the room with a glance, greeted Brown pleasantly, and then her eyes fell upon the sheaf of roses. Brown was about to plead an engagement and suddenly fade from the scene when Mrs. Jason gave an exclamation.
 "Why, Henry, you dear!" she exclaimed, gathering the roses in her arms and turning upon her husband with beaming countenance. "You were just about to send them up, I'll bet. Of course they are for me! And I have been reproaching you all the morning. Of course you couldn't forget it was our anniversary, could you, dear boy?"
 The doctor became a new man in appearance on the instant.
 "Of course not, my dear," he said enthusiastically, sweeping her into his arms.
 And as he looked across his wife's shoulder at Brown the two men exchanged glances. One was an appeal for congratulations, and the other rendered it quite nobly.—New York Press.

Cause of His Grudge.
 "Why are you trying to shoot those young robins in our trees with your air gun, Archie?" was the father's mild admonishment. "Don't you know they are harmless, sweet voiced little things?"
 "Well, I've got a grudge against one of 'em, an' I don't know just which one it is," was the boy's sullen retort. "So I'm goin' to kill 'em all an' get the right one."
 "But what grudge have you against a poor robin?"
 "Everything I do on the sly one of 'em flies an' whispers it in mamma's ear. She says so."—Bohemian Magazine.

Poor Old Bird.
 "What's the matter with that old hen?" asked the guinea fowl. "She looks worried."
 "Oh," replied the bantam rooster, "she's a temperance crank, and she's worrying for fear some of her eggs will be used in the making of eggnog."—Catholic Standard and Times.
