Superfluous.
"He wants to have a plank demanding old age pensions for men in the platform this year."
"But why this discrimination? Would not the women need it as badly?"
"Yes, they might need it, but they would never grow old enough to be entitled to it, so what's the use?"

Explained.
"Though he dipped into business, All he could do was fail. He only was an honest man. That tells the simple tale."

Sure Sign.
"Do you think she will marry Jack?"
"Sure to."
"How can you tell?"
"She is beginning to explain his family."

Educated Food.
"How do you like the new cook?"
"Great. Her biscuits are a poem."
"She must be a graduate of a cooking school."

Remorse.
"Spring might fool us and be good, Winter's programme blocking. Then we'd be ashamed, we would. For this early knocking."

Humor

THE REVELATION.

Her Suspense Was Wearing White It Lasted.

Long and steadfastly he looked into her eyes. She returned his gaze steadily and without winking. For a minute neither spoke. Then she broke the silence.

"You think it is"—She hesitated. He gazed into her eyes again—those great, heavenly blue eyes.

"I did not want you to understand"—he began.

She interrupted him with some impatience. "Can we not understand each other?" she cried. "The suspense of it all is wearing me out. Do you wish me to believe?"

He broke in upon her. "It is not what I wish you to believe," he said gently. "It is what you must know I have determined."

She covered her face with her hands as if preparing herself for the worst. But she was a woman—a proud, imperious woman. She would show him that she could suffer and make no sign. She rose from her chair.

"Well," she demanded. "It is only a little granulation," he continued. "Nothing serious whatever. I will give you a prescription. The charge will be $10."

For had he not looked long and steadfastly into her eyes?—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

The Artful Dodger.

Ben had been going to school all of a month, and Ben's father thought it high time to find out how things were running. So he asked one day, "And what was it you learned all about this morning?"

"Oh, a mouse. Teacher told us all about mouses."

"Fine, sonny! Now, how do you spell mouse?"

A long moment's silence, and then the future editor bled pencilled the earlier communication thus: "Father, I guess I was wrong. It wasn't a mouse. It was a rat."—Harper's Weekly.

Slightly Different.

Borus (struggling author)—I was surprised at the favorable reception accorded the little farce comedy I wrote last month. But what did your dramatic critic mean by suggesting that I write another one before I retire?

Nagus (literary editor)—He didn't put it quite that way. He said you ought to write one more and then quit.—Chicago Tribune.

Overheard on the Links.

"Neatness is essential on the links," said H. J. Whigham, the golfer, at a dinner in Chicago. "At Shinnecock Hills one day I played behind two young and pretty girls. Overtaking them, I heard the younger say, 'How many holes on this course, Alleen?'" "Nineteen, dear," said Alleen, "including the one in your stocking."

Sour Grapes.

"What a pity you are engaged so young, my dear," said the maid who was beginning to carry weight for age. "You will never know what fun it is to refuse a man."

"No, I suppose not," rejoined the fair debutante, "but you can't imagine how much fun there is in accepting one."—New York Press.

Took Out the Stars.

He thought he had nerve, and he proposed to the beautiful heiress. "Wilt thou?" he asked poetically. "No," she stormed, with hauteur; "thou wilt." And he did wilt. He wilted like a two ply collar at a ball game on an August afternoon.—Houston Post.
