FARMERS FAVOR PROHIBITION

Farmers in many counties throughout the state are happy now because the counties in which they live have been added to the dry column, and no liquor can be sold there as soon as the result of the local option vote can be put into effect. On the other side there are many people in the cities who are mourning because the farmers have their cause for rejoicing.

Klamath County is the land of farmers and if prohibition is a good thing for farmers, it certainly must prove a good thing for this county. The cities of this county depend almost entirely for support on the farmers and it is only proper that they should submit to the will of those upon whom they depend for business success.

Results on the last election show that throughout the state wherever there was a contest between the wet and dry forces, almost without fail the vote in the cities and towns had the balance on the wet side, while the rural districts cast their lot with the anti-saloon people. The reason for this condition has been sought by those who have made some study of the local option question, and several answers have been given.

It is argued that the men of the towns and cities desire the saloons to remain because the licenses cut down the expenses of the city government. Another reason advanced is that the saloon is such a common thing to a man of the city that he pays but little attention to it, and so does not notice its evil effects to the extent usual with the man from the country who pays occasional visits to the city.

From the farmer's standpoint there are several arguments explaining why the farmer is so universally ready to vote the city saloons out of business. For one thing, it is argued that in western Oregon especially the farmers are not able to keep their harvest hands sober, and as a result they lose large parts of their crops because there is no labor available to do the harvesting.

It is also argued that the saloon is a novelty to the farmer more than to the city man, and that for this reason the farmer feels its evil effects more than the city man. A farmer coming to town drops into a saloon, takes a few unaccustomed drinks and winds up by frittering away his time, spending his money and otherwise celebrating his visit with remorse and decides to put temptation behind him by voting to remove the temptation while at the polls in the rural district, free from the call of the juice that cheers.

Whatever the solution of the question may be it remains a fact that the dry area of the state is increasing and the prediction is now being made even by the liquor dealers themselves that Oregon as a whole will be added to the dry column within the next two years.

A man, who has just completed a term of 19 years in prison in Maine, has been offered $100,000 for a sewing machine device which he perfected while in prison. That is a little over $2,000 a year but it is doubtful if many men would voluntarily go through the same experience even if assured of that salary.

Sometimes a preacher must be tempted to have the church bell rung for fire instead of prayer meeting--the crowd is always so much bigger.

An easy spender is very rarely a foolish one.

It is said that money talks. Perhaps that is the reason that it makes some people keep their mouths shut.

The smile that won't come off is never acquired by associating with your dentist.

And then, again, the yellow peril is sometimes nothing but a well developed case of dyspepsia.

When you hear a man making a noise like a mule don't get into an argument with him.

All the good in the world can't keep a man from destruction if it is all outside of him.

When you execute an evil deed don't clutch the matter by paying a dollar to have it recorded.

Good intentions may be the beginning of good institutions, but it is impossible for them to be the end thereof.

Probably the reason why so many people are not good is because there are so many opportunities for not being good.

There are lots of people who won't be who give themselves master hands if consulting the truth.
