May Reclaim Desert Lands of Lake County

According to the Lake County Examiner, an attempt is to be made to reclaim the desert land of Warner valley. During the Spring of this year and also last Fall a number of settlers went into that section and located homesteads upon these lands. Dry land farming is not profitable, and the matter of getting water on the land has been a puzzling question. In connection with the solution of the problem the Examiner says:

J. H. Turpin, who has for the past year or so been experimenting with soils and irrigation in Warner Valley, was in Lakeview this week, and he was accompanied home by M. R. Hart, who is interested with him in his experiments.

Blue Joint is on the desert north of Plush where there has been a rush of settlers the past few months to locate the rich sagebrush land. Messrs Turpin and Hart are working on a scheme to irrigate a large tract of this land. The country is comparatively level for miles, with only a slight decline from the farthest point to a large lake, containing a permanent body of water, supplied by the overflow from the Warner valley lakes and marshes. It is estimated that by raising the waters ten feet the highest land can be put under water. To accomplish this they have bought a 10 inch pump, which they will put in operation and fill several small reservoirs from which the water may be drawn as needed. These reservoirs can be filled from the lake at any desired time.

Dorris Realizes Jail Is Absolute Necessity

The citizens of Dorris are beginning to realize that as their town grows certain institutions are absolutely necessary and the residents of the new railroad terminal are beginning to feel the need of a jail, better roads and a school house.

A meeting was held some few days ago at which all of these questions were considered. It was decided that a wagon road should be built to the Lower Klamath Lake and Tule Lake region as it would facilitate freighting and bring the trade of those agricultural sections to Dorris.

When the matter of a jail was taken up Mark L. Burns offered the town a lot in his addition free of charge. The offer of Mr. Burns was not accepted but other parties were given an opportunity to make similar offers.

A tangle which has been worrying the people of Dorris for some time is the question of a school building. Some months ago a bond issue was voted with which to build a schoolhouse, but the provisions of the arrangement did not meet with the approval of certain influential taxpayers with the result that Dorris is left without school facilities.

The reasons alleged for holding up the issue of these bonds is that certain ranches containing many thousands of acres are being subdivided into small tracts and when sold a new school district will become necessary, but that the present bond issue would continue to be a charge against their property for a period of ten years.
