KLAMATH FALLS, TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 1, 1908

GREED THE CAUSE.

But for the greed of gunners who have been "getting rich quick" by exterminating the native birds that frequent the lake region of Southern Oregon, President Roosevelt would probably never have turned Lower Klamath, Malheur and Harney lakes into National bird preserves, and absolutely prohibited the killing of any and all native birds around those waters. But the greed of the gunners who were supplying the millinery market brought upon them the curse of the National Audubon Society, and that society, having the ear of the President, had no difficulty in securing executive orders which shut out all manner of gunners, professionals as well as mere lovers of the sport.

It is not in the power of the President to amend state game laws, or to issue orders regulating the killing of game; but it is entirely within the power of the President to regulate the use of the public domain, within any state, and it was by exercising this power and creating bird preserves that the President was able to check the ravages of commercial gunners.

The proclamation of the President creating the reservation provides as follows:

"The taking or destruction of the birds' eggs and nests, and taking or killing of any species of native bird for any purpose whatsoever, except under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture, is prohibited, and warning is expressly given to all persons not to commit within the reserved territory any of the acts hereby enjoined. This reserve to be known as Lake Malheur Reservation."

The Klamath Lake proclamation was similar, save that it did not provide for the killing of birds by scientific, under permit of the Secretary of Agriculture, is prohibited, and warning is expressly given to all persons not to commit within the reserved territory any of the acts hereby enjoined. This reserve to be known as Lake Malheur Reservation."

In recommending the creation of the Klamath reservation, Secretary Garfield said:

"I have the honor to submit herewith, for your signature, form for an Executive Order creating the Klamath Lake Reservation for the protection of native birds. Many suitable places in the tule marshes, which extend for many square miles around Klamath Lake and along its outlet, were occupied as breeding grounds for an unknown period by countless thousands of many species of waterfowl, but during recent years these annual nesting resorts have been systematically hunted by paid agents of the millinery supply trade, whose continued depredations, unless stopped at once, promise a total depopulation of the bird life in that region at an early day."

"The territory to be reserved is a portion of that authorized by Congress in the act approved February 9, 1905, to be reclaimed by the Reclamation Service, and the form of order as submitted recognizes this condition and is made subject to reclamation requirements. It is believed, however, that not all of these marsh lands will be reclaimed and that abundant and suitable nesting sites will be available within the reserved district after the reclamation work is completed."

"This reserve is strongly urged by the National Association of Audubon Societies and is endorsed by the Biological Survey for the Department of Agriculture. The physical character of the district renders it peculiarly fitted and advantageous as a breeding site for many species of waterfowl of the Pacific Coast region, and its reservation is therefore earnestly recommended."

The story comes from Atchison, Kansas, and you may accept it at your own or Atchison's valuation. When the weary and dirty laborer in a street car gave his seat to a young woman, she was effusive: "Thank you, very, very much. You are just too good, and it is such a nice seat too, exactly what I wanted. You are very, very kind." As she fluttered down into the seat she didn't hear him clearly, but everybody else in the car heard him say: "Ah, quit yer kiddin', ain't yer got the seat?"

Being a humane man, that Louisville judge was certainly confronted by a puzzling situation. Five boys were brought up before him charged with the theft of as many hymn books. It was a clear case, and it seemed that it might be easily disposed of until one of the lads, "a manly little fellow," looked that upright judge and Christian Kentucky gentleman squarely in the eye and explained: "Please, sir, we felt like we just had to play church, and the only way we could do it was to get those hymn books. Without them we would have had to sing 'I'm afraid to go Home in the Dark.'" The judge let them go, of course.

These doctors who go about curing some people and trying to cure more, of ills that are more or less real or imaginary according to the size of the pocket, really ought to have a greater sense of their responsibility to the people. Now here is the case of that one who called up a lady by phone and asked her: "Has your husband religiously followed my instructions about his medicine?" "Not exactly, doctor," was the reply. "I simply can't keep him from swearing like a trooper every time he looks at the medicine bottle or hears your name."

Looks as though a stormy matrimonial life might naturally be expected by that couple out in Oklahoma who gave their names at the marriage license office as Molly Cloud and Jim Big Thunder. Of course there will be squalls.

Denver newspaper declares there are exactly six hundred and twenty million railroad ties in the country. Must have an ex-actor on the staff.

If a man can just manage to keep too busy to find fault, he won't have much trouble finding happiness.

As yet the women seem to have escaped the charge of being nature fakirs, in spite of the rats in their hair.
