TYPHOID DUE TO NEGLECT OF HYGIENIC CONDITIONS.

The deadly and treacherous typhoid fever, about this time of the year finds its victims among all classes of our people. The young and old, as well as those of middle age, of both sexes, are alike liable to its insidious attacks, and, like tuberculosis, the more that we know about it the more readily will we be able to ward off its onset and nurse its victims back to health. That typhoid was prevalent in remote antiquity, and that it was referred to under other names, in the description of diseases by the great Hippocrates more than 23 centuries ago, is the opinion of men and women eminent in medical science and its literature. It is a dreadful and a justly dreaded disease, it follows in the wake of human habitation and civilization, and its awful toll of victims is the terrible penalty paid by our boasted modern civilization for neglect of simple hygienic conditions. According to a brochure about to be sent out by the medical and surgical faculty of Maryland, warning the people of the country of the dangers of this disease, this insidious miasma plucks from our families and our friends the fairest flowers of youth and beauty, the darlings of our homes who were capable of filling the useful and honorable positions and of adorning our social and civil life. Everybody ought to know that malarial fevers, of which we hear so much and read in the daily newspapers so frequently, are caused by the bite of the despised mosquito, whose habitat is the stagnant pools of undrained marshes and isolated ponds. When these marshes and ponds have been drained and cultivated, malarial fever is replaced by that companion of modern civilization, typhoid fever, which is caused by the impurities resulting from the aggregation of animal life, the soil becoming gradually polluted and favorable to the development of the typhoid bacillus and other germs. These typhoid bacilli or germs live in the polluted soil and water and from them are directly or indirectly communicated to human beings and cause the fever. The typhoid germ is widely distributed geographically, being found in the torrid, temperate and frigid zone the fever occurring in Iceland and Norway, Egypt and other parts of Africa, as well as in Europe and America. It is not easily destroyed and it has been shown that it lives at least three months in ice, that it is not destroyed by freezing and thawing, that it may live in the dry state many months, on furniture, clothes, floors and other surfaces; that it lives for several weeks in sand and other dust, that it lives in soil favorable to it for five or six weeks, that it lives longer in still water than in running water; that it may live 30 days in soil favorable to its growth, that it is destroyed by a temperature of 167 degrees Fahrenheit in 15 minutes. Typhoid fever is often caused by the pollution of the soil and water in proximity of stables, barnyards, pig sties, chicken houses, duckponds, etc. the decayed animal matter and refuse from them infiltrating the soil and contaminating the water supply.

FASHION NOTES.

Fashion is treading on high heels again this fall. The tendency toward soft-clinging skirts now extends below the knees. Braided skirts are no longer. At any rate, they won't be pretty soon if styles become much more radical. You should face the under-brim of your new fall hat. The women who have tried to face the upper brim pronounce the thing impossible. Herring bone serges are becoming popular for young woman's wear; they keep the chaps at a respectful distance. One style of fall hats is called the "runabout," and after one has measured the dimensions it doesn't seem such a bad name either. Food frites are the latest hat frowns. It will be found a very convenient arrangement and at the same time heighten the illusion if the crown is made of looking glass. Tailored fall suits follow the same lines as last summer linen suits, provided the prospective owner has not grown much thinner or more fleshy. Married men will welcome the fashionable high-waisted dresson regardless of whether or not they seem to disturb natural architecture; fewer buttons, you know. Bob I. Reisman of Chicago, famed as the "king of hoboes," says he is about to start a revolution of the masses that will make the French revolution look like a Sunday School picnic. Some men have queer ideas regarding the best means of helping their unfortunate fellows. The attractions offered by the government have apparently induced a large number of American citizens to risk their fortunes in another less scenic lottery at Dallas and other South Dakota towns. Why not allow them to register at home for these kind openings. Chief Gerónimo, for years an outlaw Apache and now a prisoner of war, brought an indictment against the white man before the League of American Sportsmen at Lawton, Ok., recently. The chief said that the Indian food, while the white man has slain only slaughtered enough game slaughtered ruthlessly for titles. Countess Lydie Rostopchine recently wrote to the management of the Martha Washington Hotel, New York that she was coming to this country, she requested that apartments be reserved for her and that someone be at the steamship dock to meet her when she came in. To insure being recognized, she enclosed her photograph in the letter. Strange to say, the plan worked and now all New York is clamoring for the name of the photographer. Minneapolis has undertaken a novel investigation. For perhaps the first time in the history of our large cities the ownership of property devoted to the promotion of the social evil is being inquired into. It has been discovered, as would be discovered in almost any city of the land, that the houses in which resorts are conducted are largely owned by the "prominent citizens." Those people always "deplore" vice of this sort, yet they knowingly and willingly take the rent that comes through the illegal use of their property. It is to be hoped that Minneapolis will not be the cities of the nation an example in dealing with leprosy of this sort.

MILLS ADDITION LOTS

are Advancing in Value

When blocks in Mills Addition were bought at bargain prices a number of shrewd investors bought; since that time values have increased materially.

These Lots are Bargain Buys at present prices, and there is every reason to anticipate an advance in prices. Remember these lots are FIFTY feet in width and ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY FEET deep—more than double the area of most town lots offered to investors.
