KLAMATH FALLS, THURSDAY, JANUARY 7, 1909.

I DO NOT BELIEVE THE DEAD DEPART.

I do not believe the dead depart, says William T. Stead, in the January Delineator. They are still with us, closer and nearer than they ever were before.

Recent scientific discoveries have rendered the hypothesis of communication between the living and the so-called dead much more thinkable by the average man than it was fifty or even fifteen years since. Photography, the telephone, the X-ray and wireless telegraphy are accustoming mankind to the possibility of many things which our fathers would have dismissed as absolutely incredible. Fifty years ago the possibility of holding vocal converse with a friend at a distance of a hundred miles would have been scouted as scientifically out of the question. To hear a voice while seeing no man was in former times deemed so uncanny an experience as to justify an assumption of a supernatural agency.

All these things have done much to break down skepticism, and I no longer fear being written down as a lunatic when I say that I have the same confidence as to the certainty of communicating with friends who have passed over into the other world as I have in our ability to talk through the telephone to distant friends.

Several years ago a dearly-loved friend of mine promised me that if she passed over before I did, she would endeavor to do four things:

- (1) She would use my hand by means of automatic writing to communicate with me;
- (2) She would make herself visible in her habit as she lived to one or more of her friends who possessed the gift of seeing;
- (3) She would come and be photographed;
- (4) She would control some medium and give me a message hall-marked as genuine by a private sign known only to her and myself.

Within a year of her death she did all four. She wrote with my hand describing her experiences after her transition. She appeared once in broad daylight in the street to one friend. To another she appeared in a well-lighted dining room when dinner was being served, and she also appeared to a third less publicly. She has been photographed four or five times, the portrait being instantly recognizable by all who knew her, although except to clairvoyants no form was visible before the camera. The fourth and last test was given unexpectedly by a strange medium to a friend of mine. It referred to an incident at her death, and it was accompanied by the mathematical symbol which we had privately agreed upon should be the test or hall-mark of her identity.
