WHEN FREDA WAKES.

When Freda wakes, the day's bright eye has scarce illumined the eastern sky. The busy swallows 'neath the eaves are just astir, and through the leaves the morning sephyr steals and quakes When Freda wakes.

When Freda wakes—her maiden charm being started by the clock's alarm—She goes down in her brief attire And hustles up the kitchen fire With husky arm the furnace snakes When Freda wakes.

When Freda wakes she starts a song And keeps it up the morning long. My pillow's wet with bitter tears. 'Tis vain for me to stop my ears. I even hear her mingling cries When Freda wakes.

When Freda wakes she aims the door And kicks the cat across the floor. She drops the girde on the step. (She does it just for spite, I think.) The ridgepole of the building shakes When Freda wakes.

The Egotist.

"See, how ugly they are! I'm mighty glad I wasn't born a bird."—Harper's Weekly.

Cut Himself Loose.

The tramp had related to the lady in the wayside cottage the weird story of how he was tied to a tree by bandits and left to fustle.

"But, my poor man," protested the good woman. "If you were tied so tightly how did you get free?" The tramp wiped away a tear.

sent on Her Way Rejoicing. "I'm going to bite some photographs taken, John," said the wife to her husband the other morning. "Have you any preferences as to postion?" "Well," rejoined the husband of his wife, "if you were to pore before the camera while in the act of sewing a button on my trousers it would make a picture that I could contemplate with pleasurable emotion." —Chicago News.

More Fitting. She was fair, fat and forty, was Flo Funnibole, and she wanted to go to a fancy dress ball and appear slim and all in some dress—what, she didn't quite know. "I think," she remarked, "Funnibole, that a role that would well suit my pose would be Helen of Troy." But he said—to annoy: "Why not Helen of Avordupois?" —London Scraps.
