DOLBEER, The Furniture Man

The Foolish Railroads.
The stage fare from Huntsville to Glasgow—twenty-five miles—was $1.50. This stage carried the mail, and it had to go. When the roads were so muddy horses could not pull the stage a double yoke of oxen took their places. It was slow traveling, but they got through. The steamboat fare from Glasgow to St. Louis for the early fifties was $7. That included steamer food and meals, and if the boat was held up a week or two on a sand bar the accommodations went on without extra charge. The steamboat owners never believed the railroads could successfully compete with them. The way they looked at it people wouldn't be willing to travel 100 or 200 miles tied down to one seat in a small car when they might be enjoying the freedom of a big and handsomely furnished boat. Then how are they going to find room for an orchestra and a dance? An old river captain wanted to know, "No place to eat or drink; no room to move about; just sit still all day long on a little wooden bench. Why, it's downright foolishness!"—Macon Republican.

The Eye on the Red Flag.
There are many odd bits of bunting unfurled to the breeze in New York harbor, but the oddest of all perhaps is the ensign that flutters from the staff of a little craft that rounds the Battery sea wall promptly at noon every day and then disappears up the North river. It is a triangular flag with a flaming red background, from which stands out in bold relief a great cyclopean eye. Inside the porthole is a man in blue coat and brass buttons, who views the water front and passing craft through a long telescope. This is the supervisor of the harbor. His duties are to see that the regulations are observed in the East river, the upper bay and the Hudson river, that the channels are kept free of obstructions and that the city's docks and ferries are being looked after as they should be. As soon as he steps on board his vessel the unique ensign is raised. It signifies to all nautical folk: "I've got my eye on you. Watch out!"—New York Sun.

Woman's Work.
After dinner the other evening Mr. and Mrs. Brown started to speak of their respective duties, and soon an argument as to whether the husband or the wife had the hardest work to perform was in full swing. First Mrs. Brown warbled and then wifely sang. "A wife," argued the good lady, "has to cook, wash dishes, clothe the kids, scrub the floors, sweep the house, make the beds, build the fires, carry up coal, nail slats on the back fence, dig"—
"Is that all?" sarcastically interrupted Mr. Brown.
"No," was the prompt rejoinder of Mrs. Brown. "In addition to those duties every wife has to keep her husband from making a fool of himself."—Philadelphia Telegraph.

Every Price Should Have a Reason.
It must be remembered always that it is not the price of an article which is important, but the reason for the price.
The bankrupt stock, the fire sale, the manufacturer's remnants, the annual clearance, the removal sale, the dissolution of partnership sale—what are these and many more but arguments for the price? And note this one point—that without the argument the price is powerless. Reduce fur lined overcoats from $100 to $50 and you may sell easily all you have to offer. Instinctively the public sees the whole picture—the proprietor's anxiety, the inevitable removal, the lessening days the final sacrifice and the store full of eager buyers, quick to seize such an opportunity. This is only half the reduction previously considered. But one is business without imagination, and the other is business with it.—Lorin F. Deland in Atlantic.

The Characteristic National Meal.
It is not only in Scotland that breakfast is the characteristic national meal. Travel where you may, the first meal of the day is the one that strikes the foreign note, luncheon and dinner having gradually absorbed cosmopolitan qualities that are not even confined to hotels. But you never feel so much of an Englishman as when Switzerland gives you rolls and butter and honey and nothing more with your coffee or when France makes this into one exquisite crumbling "croissant," with an inch or two from a yard long loaf, or when Denmark adds cream instead of milk to the coffee and a dangerous piece of pastry to the black bread and round white roll. Yet our English breakfast became an institution only in the eighteenth century. Before that only royalty breakfasted off meat, bread and cheese and ale. The commoner, such as Peppy, took merely a morning draft of buttered ale.—London Chronicle.

Anchored him.
"I was at a reception with a certain young lady the other night," said a man who always tells the truth, "and her father was there too. He doesn't think much of me, and he followed us about from room to room—wouldn't let us get out of his sight for a minute. Well, I knew the old man was an awful tightwad, so I thought up a scheme. I carelessly dropped a half dollar on the floor while he was looking. He moved over and put his foot on it and never stirred until the party broke up. Meanwhile daughter and I went in and enjoyed ourselves."—

THE SULTAN KEPT HIS WORD.
After the French Ambassador Was His Guest He Sent the Gift He Had Promised.

The threshold of the harem has occasionally been crossed clandestinely, yet, save those in rare cases where a Turkish family, having adopted the conventions of the Europeans, admits its intimate friends, no stranger has openly and officially been permitted to visit the gynaeceum of the Turk, says N. C. Adomides in The Delinquent for July. The one exception to this ironclad rule, strange to say, occurred in the palace of a sultan.
It was in the year 1897, when the British government, attempting to coerce the Sublime Porte into a coalition against Napoleon, ordered the Sultan, Selim III, to surrender his fleet. This Selim refused to do, and the English fleet sailed through the Dardanelles into the Propontis. Meanwhile, General Sebastian, the French ambassador, assisted the Sultan in organizing the defense of Constantinople, and did it so admirably that the British fleet retired without firing a shot. Accordingly, the Padiashah told him to choose his reward. The general, a thorough Frenchman, asked permission to visit his Majesty's harem.
Selim, bound by his word, granted this unprecedented favor, and invited him to witness the review of the sultanas. As the latter, the most beautiful women of the East, with blushing cheeks and modest eyes, passed one by one before them, the Sultan said: "Whoever of them all you find fairest is yours." Sebastian, delighted, indicated one of the imperial odalisques, a Georgian of divine beauty, with deep black eyes.
The next morning a procession of black slaves appeared at the embassy, bringing with them a magnificent casket. Raising the lid thereof, Sebastian beheld, lying upon a purple cushion, the head of the beautiful girl he had chosen. By its side lay a letter from the Khalifa, which read as follows:
"Though our law forbids that a woman of Islam be given to a Christian, yet thou shalt have at least the consolation that none other shall possess her whom thou hast preferred."

AND THAT'S THE REASON.

"Don't you want your nice bread and butter, Anne?" asked her father. Anne shook her head. "It's a shame to waste such nice bread and butter," continued her father. "I'll eat it myself." Anne watched the process with big eyes and a look of expectancy on her face.
Finally, when the last mouthful had disappeared, Anne asked, "Papa, did it tickle?"
"Tickle?" said her father. "Why, no; what do you mean?" "I thought it would tickle," said Anne. "It had a long hair on it."

JUST LIKE GOD.

A mother was talking to her little girl of the love of God for us. She repeated the beautiful verse, "For God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son that whosoever believeth in Him shall not perish, but have everlasting life," and said, "Isn't it wonderful, dear, that God should love us so much as that?" To her surprise the child replied, "No, mama, I don't think it wonderful." The mother said, "Why, daughter, don't you know that God's love is wonderful?" "I think it would be wonderful if it were any one else," said the child, "but it's just like God."
