CAN PINCHOT STAY ON?

A Question That Is Occupying the Mind of Officials in Washington.

WASHINGTON, July 24.—To what extent can a subordinate of one department of the federal government direct the head of another department, and to what degree will the President permit such interference to extend without disciplining the subordinate or making a change in his cabinet?

An interesting controversy is pending between Secretary of the Interior Ballinger and Gifford Pinchot, chief of the forestry service of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. Pinchot is being criticised and condemned with a degree of freedom these days that marks a diminution of his influence, if not the actual beginning of a movement to drive him from public service.

Congress Blocks Pinchot.

Months ago a resolution was passed by Congress providing that no new forestry reservations should be created, and no existing reservations should be enlarged in Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Wyoming, Colorado and Montana, except by act of Congress. Up to that time the reservations had been created and enlarged by presidential proclamation. Mr. Pinchot then found in Mr. Garfield, the Secretary of the Interior, a friend. Mr. Pinchot persuaded Mr. Garfield to withdraw an administrative sites in different localities from 50 to 200 or 300 acres near forestry reservations.

Upon the change of administration, when Mr. Ballinger succeeded Mr. Garfield, a new practice was promptly inaugurated. Mr. Ballinger decided that to withdraw the so-called administrative sites was a violation of the law, and the result is that the controversy has been referred to the Attorney-General for solution.

Secretary Ballinger has other grievances against Mr. Pinchot. Not only is he of the opinion that Mr. Pinchot has been guilty of nullifying the will of Congress, but he feels a personal interest in a controversy which Mr. Pinchot has raised and has carried to the President.

Pinchot Carries Tales.

Last February Mr. Garfield, acting upon the recommendation of Mr. Pinchot, withdrew from settlement many acres of land located along streams. The withdrawal was based upon a policy to hold in control of the government all water sites located upon public lands. The withdrawal of these lands raised a loud protest throughout the West, and Mr. Ballinger, promptly upon taking the office of Secretary of the Interior, rescinded the order of his predecessor and restored to entry the lands that had been withdrawn. Subsequently Mr. Ballinger ordered that restricted areas surrounding water-power sites should be withdrawn from settlement.

Mr. Pinchot went to President Taft and told him how water power trusts would gobble up valuable sites in the public domain. The President was impressed with the showing made by Mr. Pinchot. He sent for his Secretary of the Interior. Mr. Ballinger was asked to explain what safeguards he had thrown out to protect for the public the valuable water-power sites. Mr. Ballinger experienced no difficulty in convincing the President that his action had been conservative, and that he was right.

Throughout the controversy Secretary of Agriculture Wilson has remained a mere spectator. Mr. Pinchot is supposed to have great influence, but whether it will be sufficient to keep him in his present position in the face of the opposition of Secretary Ballinger remains to be developed.
