AT THE OPERA HOUSE

Tonight a series of films showing Wilbur Wright and his aeroplane will be presented at the Opera House. These are especially interesting at this time on account of the wide interest aroused by the recent army tests in which the Wrights took the leading part. The films show Mr. Wright and his airship at close range and in some of his most daring flights—in May, 1908, when he won the cup offered by the Aero club of Paris by flying 100 feet in the air; on December 18, 1908, when he won the Michelin prize for staying in the air two hours, and again when he sailed 260 feet in the air, passing over a balloon stationed at a height of 300 feet.

Another of the films is a beautifully colored series showing several wonderful transformation scenes, entitled "Playing Patience."

Then a splendid presentation of Scott's famous novel, Kenilworth, dealing with the tragic romance of the love of the Earl of Leicester, Queen Elizabeth's favorite, and Amy Robsart.

THE OREGON STATE

FAIR POULTRY EXHIBIT

The Oregon State Fair date is September 13 to 18, and I wish to call the attention of poultry keepers generally to the poultry exhibit at this fair. This exhibit at previous fairs has been well supported and superior to many of our western states. We wish, however, to make the coming exhibit the best that has yet been held, equal, if not superior, to that of the best state fair in the west. And it can be done.

The poultry show is an attractive feature of every state fair, and poultry keepers should take a pride in seeing the poultry industry well represented at this fair. We know the poultry industry is one of the most important in the state, but a great many people do not look at it in that way, and it is often the fault of those interested in the industry that they do. Let us show that the poultry interests can make as good a showing at the state fair as any of the other industries represented. It can be made one of the most attractive as well as instructive features of the show. The poultry department of a state fair is not for the special benefit of poultry breeders and exhibitors. It is a part of the general scheme of the fair management to have every industry represented at the fair in order that the fair as a whole may be attractive and instructive to visitors generally, and it rests largely with the poultrymen themselves to see that their own industry is properly represented. Let us send to the fair such an array of exhibits as will impress the public with the fact that the poultry industry is worthy of consideration. The dairymen and the horsemen and the fruitmen will not boast our business; we must do that ourselves.

Hundreds of thousands of dollars sent out of this state every year for poultry and eggs. How to keep that money at home is a vital problem. A good poultry exhibit at the fair, by stimulating a greater interest in poultry keeping, will go a long way towards solving this problem.

First, we want an exhibit that will appeal to the fancier or breeder of pure bred stock; second, we want an exhibit that will appeal to the man who is less interested in breeding exhibition fowls as he is in practical methods of poultry culture. A successful state fair poultry exhibit must have both. If we can do our part the poultry buildings will be crowded with visitors, and the poultry exhibit will be the most talked of feature of the fair after it is over.
