THE TURKISH MASSACRES

Story Told by an American Woman Who Was a Witness of the Scenes of Slaughter.

The following is a recent Spokane dispatch to the Woman's National Daily:

Mrs. Edith C. Grosvenor of Spokane, one of the few American women to witness the ceremony accompanying the girding on of the hereditary sword of the Turkish rulers and was bowed to and smiled upon by the new sultan of Turkey, Hamid Effendi the Fifth, had survived perilous nights when her life depended upon the slaying of a single Christian, has returned home from a tour fraught with incidents and excitement.

Mrs. Grosvenor was in the party which pushed through the lines against the wishes of the American consul at Constantinople and visited the scenes of the terrible bloodshed the day after scores of Christians had been massacred. In telling of the excitement in Constantinople she said:

"We did not see the real battles, the organized revolts. We arrived in Constantinople against the wishes of our consul the day following, and were in the revolting district for several weeks. In Damascus we experienced the most perilous days, although we were strongly protected by the governor of the city, who threatened at one time to turn the guns of the citadel upon the Mohammedan quarter of the city should a single Christian be killed.

"That night was a perilous one, and had it, chanced that a single Christian had been killed we would have been in the center of the conflict, which broke out at other places on less provocation. It was in this period that many of the Christians and Druses left the city and in the dead of the night stole away.

"The most beautiful sight on our entire trip was at the coronation ceremony in the Turkish land, at the girding on of the sword handed down for generations by the Turkish rulers when Hamid V. was made sultan. Of course we were not admitted to the immediate service, but we saw all that other Europeans or Christians were allowed to see. Effendi himself was especially courteous to the Christians, and afforded them a fine vantage point from which to witness his first procession to his morning selamlik the morning of the ceremony.

"Old and haggard as the new ruler is he bowed and smiled upon this entire group of Christians, surrounded by several columns of soldiers. The splendor was magnificent. Every available carriage was pressed into service and the royal procession came as near to the splendor of such occurrences in days of Roman supremacy as could possibly be imagined. England has nothing so imposing as oriental coronation ceremony, and after the bloodshed of the few months before this service on that bright May morning was far too splendid for the mind to put into words.

"We were treated with respect while in all of these places, and, although we were warned by the consul that any harm which befel us would be entirely at our own risk we had little trouble going from place to place. There were cities where the inhabitants and members of the old Turks looked at us with scorn and hatred, but who dared not lift their hand against us for fear not only of their own rulers, but of any possible war which might be declared by the United States.

"At the time of the greatest danger I do not believe there were 200 Christian foreigners in the entire group of cities beridden by the revolutionists."

Mrs. Grosvenor was in the party which visited the Yildiz palace and the village harems. Frequently they were entertained by the women of the various village sheiks and after leaving Damascus felt little fear of their lives.

THE CARNEGIE HERO FUND

An Explanation of the Endowment Known By That Title—How to Get It.

In April, 1904, Andrew Carnegie created a fund of $5,000,000 for the benefit of the dependents of those losing their lives in heroic effort to save their fellow men, or for the heroes themselves if injured only. Provision was also made for medals to be given in commemoration of heroic acts.

The endowment known as "The Hero Fund" was placed in the hands of a commission composed of twenty-one persons, residents of Pittsburgh, Pa., of which Charles L. Taylor is president and F. M. Wilmut secretary and manager of the fund.

In his letter to the Hero Fund commission Mr. Carnegie outlined the general scheme of the fund thus: "To place those following peaceful vocations who have been injured in heroic effort to save human life in somewhat better positions pecuniarily than before, until able to work again. In case of death, the widow and children or other dependents are to be provided for until she remarries and the children until they reach a self-supporting age. For exceptional children exceptional grants may be made for exceptional education. Grants of sums of money may also be made to heroes or heroines as the commission thinks advisable—each case to be judged on its merits."

The fund applies only to acts performed within the United States of America, the Dominion of Canada, the colony of Newfoundland and the waters thereof, and such acts must have been performed on or after April 15, 1904.

The commission has awarded 57 medals: 47 bronze, 35 silver and 5 gold. In addition to the medals money has been given for dismembered benefits and special purposes, and for the dependents of heroes who lost their lives, amounting to $53,750. The commission has also awarded $64,462 for relief of sufferers from disaster; at Brocton, Mass., $10,000, and for the California earthquake $54,462, with the addition of large sums expended on recent disasters.

WALL STREET WAYS.

Aethos of a Brilliant Operator of Many Years Ago.

One of the most brilliant operators of Wall street in the early sixties of the last century was Walter Wellman Morse, though he was by comparison with some of the gray haired market veterans only a new boy, being just thirty years of age. The public couldn't be enjoyed made it possible for him to realize profits in any stock.

Such was the influence his indorsement would carry that after he had accumulated stock at his prices he could tell his daily callers that the stock was due to go up, and immediately there would be enough professional and public buying of the stock to send it up, thus enabling Morse to unload at a profit.

An example of Morse's popularity was illustrated in a scene accompanying the opening of subscriptions for stock in a coal mining company organized by him. The day the subscription book was opened people flocked to the office and fought with each other in their efforts to enter and get their names recorded. One man who had subscribed for a large amount of this stock, after getting away from the crowd, came back and, walking up to Mr. Morse, said, "I say, Mr. Morse, was that gold or coal stock I subscribed for?"—Moody's Magazine.

DURABLE INK.

The Secret of Its Manufacture Seems to Have Been Lost.

The ink manufacturer has made great strides in his field. He has produced many colored fluids that seem well adapted to ordinary use. But how long will this ink last without fading?

Did you ever pick up a letter written ten or fifteen years ago and note how much of it is illegible because the ink has faded? Some precious documents not a century old are preserved today in air tight cases, so that the ink will not fade any more. Others have been copied in order to retain the exact chirography of the original authors.

Fading ink is one of the things in which the ancients did not believe. Many of the medieval manuscripts six and seven hundred years old have their letters formed of ink that is as black and bright as on the day when first written.

Who has the secret of this lost art of making durable ink? It is another one of the lost arts that is worthy of investigation. The ancients had fewer materials to work with and less facilities for laboratory tests, but we must acknowledge that there are some things in which they excelled us—World Today.

Joy of a Yawn.

When life seems more than usually insipid—and such moments do come to even the most hopeful of us—there is a sudden pleasant sympathy in the yawn of the terrier on the rug before the fire. "Ah, you, too, find things a little boring, old fellow!" we say to ourselves. A dog yawns nobly, making no attempt at disguising it with politely uplifted paw. All animals seem to enjoy a yawn except man. We once saw the late lamented hippopotamus at the zoo lift himself slowly from his murky pool and yawn. It was a great spectacle, tremendous, Homeric. The concentrated boredom of the whole creation seemed expressed in that gigantic gasp. For a few fast-faded moments, post, shed, rattings, people, all seemed merged in one colossal yawn. It was wonderful. Oh, we thought as we came away, to be able to yawn like that when life becomes too silly!—Pall Mall Gazette.

Get Out of Doors.

Trudeau's classic experiment points us in the right direction. After inoculating a number of rabbits with tuberculosis he confined a number of them indoors and turned the others outdoors. The latter all recovered, while the former all died. This experiment shows that a rabbit living upon its natural food and under a natural environment is proof against tuberculosis. There is abundant reason to believe this equally true of man. In other words, tuberculosis is not a necessary evil of human life, but is a natural consequence of erroneous habits and departure from natural conditions. Man is naturally an outdoor animal. A mole lives a healthy life in a burrow. A man must live in the fresh air and the sunshine.—Medical Record.

The Brigands.

The word "brigand" is derived from a portion of the armor worn by archers, English and foreign, anciently called the "brigandine." This consisted of an apron of leather plated over, scale fashion, with thin pieces of steel. From the irregularities of the light armed men who wore these defenses the name of brigand became in course of time infamous.
