REPORTING THE COURT.

Pop and Splendor in Old Colonial Times.

In colonial days York, Me., was the scene to which the judges and lawyers from New Hampshire and Massachusetts often went, and the court sessions were attended with much pomp and ceremony. In "The Colonial Houses in Maine" E. B. Huntington Nason quotes from a record kept by John Adams, who as a young lawyer went to York in 1774 and who made at that time the following entry in his journal:

"When I got to the tavern on the eastern side of the Piscataqua river I found the sheriff of York and six of his deputies, all with gold faced hats, white breeches and very gay clothes and all thirty young men who had come on to that place to escort the court to town."

When a suit of the pomp and splendor of the court officials was described by the court officials, "when the judges wore black robes with large rambic cuffs and immense wigs and the barristers wore black gowns and also bands and approached the shire with an escort of trumpets. Their entrance was announced by cannon, and the court commenced by the reading of the writs introduced was by besting

A Patriot.

National and local characteristics come out oddly enough at school examinations. A sub-inspector, hearing a class of London Irish boys repeat Macaulay's "Horatius," inquired whether three soldiers would be likely nowadays to hold a bridge against a whole army.

"Would three Englishmen, for example?" he said.

"No, sir," said the class.

"Would three Scotsmen?"

They again dissented.

"Would three Irishmen?"

"Please, sir," shouted an excitable little fellow, "one Irishman would do it!"

How She Secured Office.

Mrs. Mary East is said to have been the pioneer woman in England to hold some of the offices as to which women's eligibility is now in dispute, but she was elected because she disguised herself as a man. For thirty-six years this remarkable woman, while masquerading as a man and acting as landlady of the White House Inn at Poplar, served assiduously on juries and in parish offices. In 1744 she was "head borough," in 1752 overseer of the poor. When her sex was finally discovered she retired to private life with the competence she had acquired as an innkeeper.

To the Point.

A little boy hurriedly entered a drug store and asked the clerk for a bottle of liniment and a bottle of china cement.

"Why," said the clerk, "that's a funny combination. What do you want with those things?"

"Ma hit dad with a teacup and broke it!" exclaimed the boy.

Knocking Hubby.

"My husband thinks he is very economical," said the blue eyed woman. "He saves everything. One drawer of his desk is devoted to time tables, and he has some that are three years old."—Exchange.

A Matter of Taste.

"Mister, you're wasting time sketching that old ruined bridge."

"Indeed?"

"Yes; there's a fine new steel bridge just a mile farther on."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

An Accomplice.

The doctor looked at the patient. "I am very sorry," he said, "that you didn't let me send for Dr. Gooding some time ago. It's scarcely worth while to bring him here now."

"Oh, well, doctor," said the patient wearily, "perhaps you can make use of him as an accessory after the fact."—Cleveland Leader.

QUEENSBORO BRIDGE.

The Greatest Structure of Its Kind in the World.

Measured by the combined length and capacity of its five main spans, the Queensboro bridge, across the East river from Fifty-ninth street, New York, to Ravenswood, Queens, is the greatest bridge in the world including approaches, its total length is 8,000 feet, width 80 feet and greatest height over 300 feet above the water. It crosses from shore to shore, 135 feet above the river, with three enormous spans of 1,182 feet, 630 feet and 984 feet, the middle one reaching across the full width of Blackwell's island. Besides these there are two more great "anchor" spans, one at each end, wholly over dry land, with a length of 3,724 feet for the five, which together contain over 105,000,000 pounds of steel. No other spans in this country, except suspension bridges, approach the longest of these, and the only trussed span in the world which exceeds it is the Forth bridge, which although 1,710 feet long, has a capacity for only two railroad tracks, less than one-third of this. There are two decks, the lower carrying a wide driveway and four electric car tracks and the upper one two sidewalks and two elevated railroad tracks and having in all an estimated capacity of 200,000,000 car passengers and millions of vehicles and pedestrians annually, it cost over $20,000,000.—Exchange.

RULE OF THE SEA.

Old Whaling Law Applied to a Twice Caught Cod.

That etiquette is observed among the fishermen that journey to the fishing banks was discovered by an amateur angler on his first trip.

The amateur hooked a codfish, but his line parted just as the fish was above the water. Back fell the codfish, carrying with him two sinkers and the hook.

Twenty minutes later another angler cried out that he had captured a cod with two sinkers and a hook. The amateur went up to the angler, who appeared to be an old salt, and asked for his hook and sinkers, which had his name stamped on them. He was surprised when the old salt told him to take the fish also.

According to the rules generally followed on the fishing boats, the second angler was entitled to the fish, but the hook and sinkers should be returned to their owner. The old angler explained why he wanted to give up the fish.

It seems that he had followed the sea a great part of his life. When a young man he was a whaler, and, according to whaling law, a dead whale belongs to the ship whose name appears on the harpoon that killed it. Therefore the old salt figured that the amateur owned the codfish he had taken.—New York Sun.

English Etchings.

At Pockforton, Cheshire, England, is to be seen a very queer beehive. It is in the shape of a castle on an elephant's back and is carved in stone.

Four miles from Bath, England, is a mysterious monument known as the "three shires stone." From it you can see parts of Somersetshire, Gloucestershire and Wiltshire.

It is announced that with the removal of a row of frame buildings not far from Blackfriars bridge the last wooden buildings within the metropolitan district of London will shortly disappear.

England has been witnessing a pronounced decline in charity fetes and balls, bazaars and fancy fairs, due, it is alleged, to the "gross and impudent dishonesty introduced into a large proportion of these charity festivals by the aristocratic ladies managing them."

Short Stories.

More than 6,000 persons are burned to death in the United States each year, according to government figures. The proprietor of one of the principal stores in Meredith, N. H., has placed the business in the hands of his four clerks to be run by them during his vacation of a year.

But seven states are represented in Congress entirely by natives of the states. These states are Delaware, Maine, Maryland, New Hampshire, South Carolina, Vermont and Virginia.

The old Cole shop in Plymouth, erected in 1694, has been converted into a quick lunch room. It has been equipped with electric lights and a flashing electric sign. This was the first blacksmith shop erected in New England.
