THE INDIANS PAID.

What the White Men Charged Them For Killing One Donkey.

In "Reminiscences of Old Times in Tennessee" a story is told of the good faith and honor of a party of Chickasaw Indians. While hunting one fall they shot a donkey, mistaking the creature for a wild animal. They sold the hide, and it finally came to the hands of John Barnes in Lipton.

When the Chickasaws returned to the region of Lipton for their annual hunt the next fall Barnes invited them to a shooting match, the prize to be the skin of a very rare animal. Thirty drives appeared at the contest, and one of them won the prize. When he saw the skin he turned it over and said: "Ha, ha! Me kill him! Me shoot him! See!" And he pointed to the fatal bullet hole.

Then Barnes told them that they had killed a donkey, a very useful animal, but he was sure that they had done it by mistake, believing it to be a wild animal.

The Indians listened attentively to the white man's words and then consulted together a few minutes. Finally they separated, each brave going to his pony, unhitching him and leading him to the spot where a gang of white men stood. Barnes in the midst of them. Then one of the Indians spoke:

"We sorry we kill donkey. We think he belong to the woods. We find him in case. We think him wild. We sorry. Now we pay. We take no white man's horse, pony, nothing of white man. We honest. We have ponies; that's all. Take pay." And he motioned to the long line of ponies, held by their owners.

"How many?" asked Barnes.
"White man say," returned the Indian; "take plenty."

The honor of the red men was not equaled by the white men, for, be it recorded to their shame, they took from the Chickasaws thirty-five ponies to pay for the accidental killing of one donkey.

COMMON TO GET ITS SHARE OF IRRIGATION FUND

PORTLAND, Nov. 2.—Extensive irrigation works are likely to follow the railroads now being built into Central Oregon. Promised transportation for that section of the state has changed the irrigation policy of Secretary Ballinger and he will take up various undeveloped projects in Oregon with the reclamation service in the near future.

Oregon will get its full share of benefits under the national reclamation law, declares the Secretary of the Interior. In addition to the amounts heretofore allotted, this state will be entitled to about $2,700,000 by 1912. Secretary Ballinger plans to set to work on some of the undeveloped projects in this state as soon as the necessary funds become available.

The building of railroads into the interior of the state make the semi-arid districts accessible for reclamation projects. Just what district will be benefited first by new irrigation works has not yet been announced.

Boys and girls of Portland and vicinity have entered heart and soul into a poultry raising movement fostered by the local Y. M. C. A. About 1,000 have joined the Portland Junior Poultry association, practically all being school children between the ages of 12 and 18. The association has the hearty co-operation of the Oregon Agricultural College, and the department of poultry husbandry of that institution has just issued a bulletin announcing a contest in poultry raising for which $200 in cash prizes has been offered. The first prize is $100, the second $50, while ten awards of $5 each will also be made. The contest opens November 1st.

The school children were interested in poultry raising by the Y. M. C. A. because of the healthful and profitable nature of the work and because the industry needs stimulating in the Pacific Northwest, the supply of poultry and eggs in this section being inadequate to meet the demands.

Better roads for this state is the object of the Oregon Good Roads association formed here during the past week with a strong membership. The association will work for good roads legislation, uniform plans of improvement throughout the state, and the collection of money for road building. It is planned to collect a fund of $15,000 during the next two years and engage a competent road engineer who shall direct all road work in the state. Much good is expected to result from the formation of the association.

The Columbia river will be restocked with sockeye salmon as a result of a visit during the past week of United States Fish Commissioner George H. Bowers of Washington, D. C. He has ordered the shipment of 2,000,000 sockeye eggs from the Yea Bay, Alaska, hatchery to be delivered to the Bonneville hatchery, and the young fry will be turned into the Columbia. During the past few years the sockeye have been growing scarce in the Columbia, but it is believed that this fine variety of commercial fish will be propagated in sufficient quantities to meet the ravage of the fishermen by restocking the river.

The One Who Knows.
"Elijah," said the judge to the defendant, "you have had a fair trial. The prosecuting attorney has shown by circumstantial evidence that cannot be gainsaid that you were in Mr. Brown's chicken coop on the night that his hens disappeared, and your attorney in his speech has practically admitted that the theory of the prosecution is true. Have you anything to say before the court pronounces its decision?"

"Judge," said Elijah, rising politely, "all I've got to say is dis. I don't know much about de law, but I does know heahsay evvidence isn't good, an' all dese lawyehs says is heahsay. I does know, foh I us de only man in dat chicken coop dat night, an' I's denied it raight erious."—Chicago Post.

An Apology?
A London journal says that a lively discussion once took place in a town council in the north of England. One thing led to another till one of the disputants gave another the lie direct. The insulted party rushed forward, and the pair clinched. At that moment the first man exclaimed, "I reiterate that you are a liar!" To the astonishment of every one, the aggrieved party let go his hold. "Oh, well," he said, "in that case I accept the apology. If a man says he reiterates, that is all any gentleman can ask." He did not understand why the bystanders laughed, but the fight was off.

That Was the Trouble.
A Wichita man was fussing because of his aching teeth. "Why don't you go to a dentist?" asked one of his friends.
"Oh, I haven't got the nerve," was the reply.

HE WAS NOT A FLINT.

Therefore He Rejected the Woman's Attempts at Familiarity.

He was riding homeward, comfortably seated and reading his paper. Being a trifle nearsighted, he was applying himself even more closely to his paper than other homeward passengers. Thus intent in the day's news, he was startled when a woman came up beside him and touched him lightly on the shoulder, at the same time casting a longing eye on his seat.

He is a polite man, and he got up. "A woman with that much nerve is entitled to a seat," he muttered to himself. "The idea of a woman deliberately nudging a man out of his seat!" Other women standing near by laughed unreservedly. He hid his embarrassment behind his paper, for he felt that his good nature had been imposed upon and that the laugh was on him.

By and by there was a vacant seat next to the one he had given up to the woman, and he sat down once more. The woman turned and looked at him amusedly. He could feel her gaze, even though he made a bluff at being intensely interested in his paper. Pretty raw, it seemed to him, for a woman deliberately to take the seat of a total stranger and then sit there and laugh at him because he was such a mark.

Then the woman spoke to him. "Aren't you going to talk to me?" she asked.

He could stand her familiarity no longer. "Well, of all the"—he stopped right there when he looked around and recognized her. It was his wife—Cleveland Leader.

COOKS' SHOPS.

They Were the Beginnings of the Modern Restaurant.

In primitive times the only places in London where the public could be entertained with food had been the cooks' shops. The famous East Cheap was a great thoroughfare, down which the stalls of the butchers alternated with those of the cooks. You chose a joint at the fish market, and you carried it next door to be cooked for you by a certain hour. If you wished for wine, you must bring that with you, for the cooks sold no liquor, although they seem to have provided, as time went on, more and more of the natural accompaniments of meat, such as bread, vegetables and pastry.

This habit continued until well into the reign of Elizabeth, and so long as such an inconvenient custom prevailed there could have been no real comfort for any citizen who chose to dine abroad. He must have had as much trouble with portage and baskets as a country party has today at a picnic. But about the time that Shakespeare came up to London a remarkable change took place in the customs of the town, and the practice of public hospitality and entertainment was singularly facilitated.

The nature of this change lay in the sudden development of the tavern and the consequent withdrawal of the cooks' shops. The worshipful company of pastrycooks, as the cooks were called, ceased to enjoy the monopoly of providing hot meals.—Edmund Gosse in Harper's Magazine.

Railroads Are Never Finished.

In one respect a railroad is unlike any other project undertaken by man—it is never finished. Like a cucumber vine, says a writer in Popular Mechanics, the instant it ceases to grow it begins to wither. There must be continuous expansion and enlargement. Larger cars require more powerful locomotives, and both in turn call for stronger bridges, longer platforms and sidings, increased safety devices, while the straightening of curves and the leveling of grades come in for their share of attention on even the oldest roads. Little wonder, then, with our railroads consuming nearly one-half of all our manufactured steel and iron and fully one-half of all the lumber made each year, that they are the unflinching barometer of the business activity of the nation.

The Wonders of Science.
It was left for the exhibitor of a photograph in the streets of Utrecht, according to an American traveler, to put the finishing touch to the wonderful invention. There was the sound of a military band in full blast, and then suddenly the tune stopped and "Halt" rang hoarsely out upon the air.

"Who's that interrupting the concert?" slipperily inquired the American, edging close to the operator.
"That," said the man, surveying him blandly, "was the voice of Napoleon Bonaparte giving the order at the battle of Waterloo."

AMERICAN WANDERLUST.

A Habit Which Strengthens the Cohesive Unity of the Nation.

Less than half the members of the United States senate and house of representatives are native born in the states which they represent. Nothing could more clearly show the alert activities of the American people and that constant intermingling of the inhabitants of the several states which adds so much to the cohesive unity of the nation. The boy who goes to a distant state often accomplishes more than the one who goes straight on in the footsteps of his father in the home village. Even Daniel Webster was not born in the old Bay State, whose influence and dignity he so well sustained and whose people mourned him so sincerely when his great life closed.

This wandering from state to state has resulted in the organizing in New York city of many state societies, which aim to gather together the natives of their respective states annually to revive the pleasant memories of the old home days, with their thousand clinging ties.

What would happen if the American people should cease to wander about the country? is a question often asked. It is said that an eastern man never amounts to anything until he goes west and that a western man has to come east in order to attain his full stature mentally. The northern man is advised to go south to learn gentle courtesy and chivalric bearing, the southerner to go north to add more iron to his blood. There can be no doubt that this constant evolution has encouraged the birth of new ideas, just as the whirling of the kitescope developed a toy into our present wonderful moving pictures, which give us glimpses of life in motion all over the world.—Joe Mitchell Chapple in National Magazine.
