TIMBER MEN INDUCEMENT

Purchases. The Deschutes Lumber company, formed by Alpena, Mich., men; the Yocqui Lumber company of Minneapolis, the Hixon Lumber company, S. S. Johnson and O. H. Gilchrist have secured holdings aggregating about 200,000 acres.
Hill interests break fee.

The coming of these timbermen to this section of Oregon is recognized by those in touch with the facts as the first advance of Hill interests into this territory. Confident of the speedy revival of business following the disturbance in the autumn of 1907, these associated timbermen, all friendly and in close touch with the Hill railroad interests, sought to take advantage of the existing depressed condition of the lumber market and demand for timber, thereby driving many good bargains in taking over holdings of the best of yellow pine timber. It seems this was done with an understanding that the Hill roads would build a branch as soon as necessary to bid for the traffic to its natural outlet in markets of the Middle West and Mississippi valley states. The market demand is rapidly being stimulated in the country east of the Rocky mountains by the bumper crops of wheat and corn, and the roads will make an effort to meet the necessities of the occasion with rates that will place the lumber in that territory.

It is recalled by a man well informed on the railroad situation that the first advent of Hill emissaries to prepare the way for building the North Bank road into Portland was the selection of the site for a great saw mill on the peninsula near St.
John by the Weyerhaeuser Timber company, which it afterwards developed was done in the interest of the railroad. Therefore, it is pointed out, the entrance of the greatest timber combination in the country into the lumber industry of this section means that it is the forerunner of the Hill road, which will claim a large share of the traffic that will be developed by the plants of the timber-men.

Small Road Bought First.
The first railroad mileage in California and in Oregon south of Portland virtually owned by the Hill railroads was the little Klamath Lake road, for the Weyerhaeuser company acquired it with the idea of eventually tearing up the track and relaying the rails to carry the logs from the Jonny Creek plateau to the shore of Upper Klamath lake—unless it could in some way be utilized as a link in a line that would better serve the purposes of the big timber syndicate or the Great Northern and its associated lines. The likelihood of its being utilized as a link is small, for it has heavy gradients, sharp curves and a "track" extending only about twenty-five miles.

But it is not alone lumber that the new road will haul out of Klamath county. During September cereal experts employed by the Hill lines made an exhaustive examination of the upper portion of Klamath county as far east as Silver Lake and Paisley into Lake county, and throughout the Deschutes district, to report upon the adaptability of that section, and also of the Klamath Indian reservation to wheat growing. The report was of the most favorable character, one of the experts declaring that no section of Eastern Washington has any advantage over this portion of Oregon as a wheat-producing country.

Much Grain to Ship.

Klamath county wheat has long been known for its high milling quality, but until this year lack of transportation prevented its shipment to outside mills, though it was sought for blending purposes. This year the crop harvested was the largest in the history of the agricultural development of the basin, and as a result a good many carloads have been shipped. California millers drawing on this source of supply. Three local mills, at Klamath Falls, Merrill and Honzana, are steadily grinding and receiving their full complement of the crop, but there is more than may be required for local consumption during the coming year, and this surplus will be quickly absorbed by the mills of the Southern Pacific lines in California and Oregon.

Each succeeding year will record largely increased production of cereal crops in this country, for the irrigation system is being pushed to completion and will add many thousands of acres to the producing areas for the seasons of 1910 and 1911. That means more tonnage for the railroads and new wealth for Oregon.
