MAY ASSESS THE DRAINAGE TAX

data had been returned by this branch of his department he would advise Mr. Reuck as to his decision in the premises. That reply has been received, and is as follows:

Department of the Interior,
Washington, Nov. 12, 1909.
Mr. Jacob Reuck, Klamath Falls, Or.:
Sir—Referring to the petition signed by yourself and others recommending the assessment of $20 per acre drainage fee upon lands within the Klamath project, you are advised that the various charges against the upper project and the Tule lake lands have not been more than tentatively considered by the reclamation service.

There are many important points to consider in connection with the settlement of water right charges for this part of the project, and final investigations are not completed on which the determination of the cost can be based. The petition forwarded cannot receive favorable consideration at present because the future action of the department cannot be determined until the plans of the project are fully developed. Very respectfully,

R. A. BALLINGER, Secretary.

It would appear from this letter that the secretary considers it possible under the law to levy such a drainage tax, and intimates, though vaguely, that there is a possibility of such a tax being imposed. If it is the result would be equivalent to the sale of the land as suggested by Messrs. Benson and Briggs, and would be followed by a reduction of the charge against the dry lands, though the amount realized might not reach the proportions hoped for by those who favored the Benson plan.

James Dixon is in the city from his ranch about eight miles out of town toward Merrill.

Thursday morning the horse on which Charley Masten was riding from the Horton ranch to the Sumners ranch stepped in a hole and threw itself, falling on Masten's arm, breaking the elbow, tearing an artery loose and smashing his hand. Masten was immediately brought into the city and the broken arm was treated. He is now resting a little easier.
