PROVIDE FOR ELDERLY FOLK

PENSIONS ALLOWED TO SUPERANUATED PEOPLE

Many Countries Grant Small Sums to Citizens When They Reach a Specified Age

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 29.—Old age pensions in foreign countries have been the subject of investigation by Congressman Frederick Lundin, republican representative from Illinois. He finds that they have proved successful and he is hopeful that some such provisions for the care of the aged may be made in the United States.

"Germany was the pioneer in the movement," he says, "with a law passed in 1889; amended in 1891, and perfected in 1899. The present law covers 25 per cent of the population, and is compulsory in many instances and voluntary in some. The pension is granted up to $57.50 a year, according to class and weekly premium paid. Beyond 70 years of age no incapacity need be shown to avail the beneficiary his or her pension.

"Denmark fell into line in 1891. All persons over 60 years of age are eligible to pension benefits, with certain limitations as to residence, health and record of citizenship.

"Laws were passed in New Zealand at intervals from 1897 to 1908, when all of them consolidated to create a liberal and enlightened system. Sixty-five years is the pension age, and to all those who are without a minimum competence and can show twenty-five years' honorable residence in New Zealand the government pays $2.50 weekly. The cost per capita of population is small. The benefits conferred are great, and not only redound to the benefit of pensioners, but to that of society in general.

"Belgium adopted an insurance annuity and nationally sustained pension act in 1900. Annuities are granted according to age and amount of premium paid. Pensions are paid to all over 65 years of age under certain prescribed conditions of want and disability.

"Italy, France and Austria are operating systems of annuities and pensions. Old age relief is recognized in these countries as an institution of worth, and the system cannot fail to grow with the advance of the times.

"Australia probably presents the best example of growth and modernization of the old age pension idea. The general plan there is about as follows: Men over 65 and women over 60 are pensioned at the rate of $2.50 and $2 a week, respectively. Restrictions pertaining to income, residence and character surround the application of the law most effectively. I am in receipt of a letter from the American consul at Newcastle, New South Wales, in which he says: 'It is the general opinion that these pensions are a very good thing, and that these laws are working out satisfactorily. In order to see for myself the people receive their pensions I was present at the first of this month and saw a large number of them paid. They appeared to be a most respectful lot of old people, and I feel certain the money allowed them for each month by the government is judiciously expended.'

"After years of consideration England adopted an old age pension law in 1908. Under its provisions all persons over 70 years of age are pensionable, if they meet the requirements as to income, habits and character. The amounts paid in run from 25 cents to $1.25 weekly.

"Canada passed an annuity law in 1908. Under it people beyond the age of 55 years may draw from $50 to $600 annually. It is a government insurance proposition pure and simple, and dependent upon premiums; but as a step, is encouraging to every believer in the humane policy of making provision for old age a matter of government regulation."

TELEPHONE BUSINESS IS UNLIKE ANY OTHER

erating for each telephone in any system increases directly as the value of the service to the individual subscriber increases.

Second, Cost of Installation—Telephone service is individualized. Each subscriber added to an exchange system that gives independent metallic service must have a separate pair of wires from his telephone to the answering jack on the switchboard. A gas or water company lays its mains in the street—one main for all residences along the street. When additional patrons want service, the gas or water company only has to lay a service pipe from the main to the property line, and not from the patron's residence to the central power plant a mile or two distant. The gas and water in the mains is common property for the patrons, and one cubic foot of gas or water will answer the patron just as well as another. Not so with telephone service. Conversations must be individualized. One message will not answer the patron as well as another. Hence service wires must extend from each subscriber's telephone, not to the nearest pole line or cable, but all the way to the exchange. This means that aerial pole lines, heavy enough to take care of an exchange with a certain list of subscribers becomes too small and inadequate when that list increases, causing a consequent increase of wires. The lighter pole line must then be replaced by a heavier one. With the doubling of the subscribers' list, the heavier pole line becomes inadequate, and must be replaced with underground conduits and cables, which are much more expensive than the light aerial cables and leads.

The cost of switchboards increases for each unit with the addition of subscribers. A 500-line capacity board will cost, installed, about $5 per line. To add another 100 line section will cost no more per line than the first 500. But to add an additional section to a 5,000 multiple already filled will cost approximately $20 per line. The unit equipment in a switchboard for subscriber No. 5,001 costs ten times that for subscriber No. 501, and telephone engineers have never found the point where the cost per unit does not greatly increase with added capacity.

The question is asked, why does the telephone company not install underground conduits and multiple boards at the start? The answer is at hand. Because a prospective patron is unwilling to pay conduit-constructed, multiple switchboard prices for service in an exchange of only a few hundred subscribers where such installation is not necessary.

Third, Increase of General Expense—Independent Bell telephone companies have not hesitated to accept a maximum limit rate in their franchise. They have aimed to be open and fair with the people whom they served. A vast majority of these franchises were obtained when not only the commodities of life were lower than now, but also when almost all material entering into the general construction was much cheaper. Wages are constantly increasing in all lines of business. The telephone has come to be a business and social necessity. Service that was eminently satisfactory five years ago would not be tolerated by the patron of today. With this demand for better and dependable service, the telephone company has been compelled to substitute skilled for unskilled help at greatly increased cost. The advent of traction lines, lighting and power systems, on account of inductive disturbances, has compelled telephone companies to substitute individual metallic circuits for grounded and common return systems, which doubles the amount of copper or iron necessary to install a subscriber's line.

With a list of subscribers three or four times as large as that anticipated at the time the exchange was installed, with a service much better and many times as extensive as that promised or contracted for, with the greatly added cost of operation and installation per unit line, due to conditions which no one foresaw and over which the company has no control, it is not unreasonable that telephone companies should have an additional rental per unit line, provided the rate charged under former conditions was reasonable and equitable for the amount and class of service furnished.
