

LYCEUM CONCERT GREAT SUCCESS

IMPERIAL HAND BELL RINGERS
AND PARTY ARE A REVELA-TION TO PATRONS OF KLAM-ATH LYCEUM COURSE

The Imperial Hand Bell Ringers and Concert Party, the first attraction in the Klamath Lyceum Bureau course, was greeted by a packed house last evening at Houston's opera house. The big audience was awarded with one of the finest entertainments ever listened to in this city. The English troupe are a superb company of musicians, and as entertainers are in a class by themselves.

The performance lasted a little over an hour, but every selection was heartily applauded with such enthusiasm that encores were responded to in every case. In addition to the bell music, the audience was treated to a number of double quartet selections, the voices being particularly fitted and well blended.

The solos of R. E. Bollean of Nebraska, was a very pleasing addition to the English party.

that a man can fill by the simple fact of an idiot."

"Natural aptitude, of course, will be the surest foundation for usefulness in any career," Dr. Butler said. "Practical experience, well analyzed and well understood, is also of prime importance. But between these two lie the study of principles and practices, the acquirement of the subsidiary information which must be drawn upon and the practice, under criticism, which gives the beginner the benefit of the experience of others. All these the university can furnish for journalism as it furnishes them for engineering or teaching."

President Butler believes that experienced editors should have charge of instructing pupils in the scientific study of journalism itself, after they have acquired a firm grounding in all branches that necessarily must be subsidiary.

Mr. Pulitzer, in defense of his school of journalism, published shortly after his endowment, suggested this plan, and it undoubtedly will be carried out when the institution is organized.

"In organizing and carrying on the school of journalism," said President Butler on this point, "we have the advantage from the outset of the suggestions and criticisms of an advisory board composed of prominent journalists having expert knowledge on the subject."

While the plans for the operation of the school are yet in a more or less chaotic state, it is certain that the suggestions of Mr. Pulitzer regarding the courses to be pursued will be followed to a great extent. Copies of the great editor's defense of his journalistic school theory have been sent to all prospective students and others who have made inquiries about the plan.

The curriculum outlined by Mr. Pulitzer in this document included: The principles of law, as pertains to the profession of journalism; literature, with special reference to the literature of politics; the study of truth and accuracy and the art of being able to find facts when they are required, rather than cramming a student full of them in school; history, with reference to the rise and fall of nations and the making and breaking of great public institutions; economics; modern languages, to such an extent that it will give a newspaperman access to other than his native tongue; the ethics of journalism, for, said Mr. Pulitzer, "above all else lies its moral sense, courage and integrity."

Mr. Pulitzer's plan, and the plan that probably will be adopted by the university, regarding the study of newspapers is as follows, according to President Butler: "Have twenty or more editors, either retired or in active work, give a course of lectures on the daily newspapers, pointing out to the students the good and bad points in each; have the students get out a paper of their own under a city editor, who will wield a pen as ruthlessly as a real editor does, but who would do what the real has no time to do—tell why he did it; teach the pupils that it is not type nor presses nor advertising that makes a newspaper, but brains, conscience and character, working out to public service."

ing humiliation. A pageant reproducing the outstanding events in Indian history, first, the ancient philosophy and culture of these oriental people; then the coming of the British, ruthless and dominant; the long wars which broke the spirit of India; the last expiring effort to regain what had been lost which found expression in the mutiny, a little more than fifty years ago—and, finally, the "Black Hole of Calcutta."

India groans with sedition. The spirit of revolution has gained such a foothold in the country that it is doubtful if its advance can ever be checked. A merciless policy of repression has failed to put down this sullen resistance on the part of India's mysterious millions.

Last summer the crops failed. On the heels of drought has followed famine and plague. India's 300,000,000, never far from the starvation line, have crossed it.

India's normal death rate is 40 per 1,000. Plague and famine claim a million lives each year, according to official figures. From the plague alone 6,354,000 died in the ten years ending 1909. Thousands die in districts never visited by the official enumerators.

This year conditions in India are not normal; they are worse than normal. Whole towns and villages are stricken. There are not enough wells to care for the sick and dying; not enough living to bury the dead. Under these circumstances it is not strange that a tremendous cry of protest has gone up from the Indian people against the mockery of holding the durbar, ostensibly a period of rejoicing, this year.

The money might be better spent. The bulk of Englishmen at home are opposed to it on the same ground. A large section of the English press has pointed out with an outspokenness unusual when the subject under discussion is the king, that humanely speaking it is cruel, and politically speaking it is unwise, to hold the durbar at this time.

The lord chamberlain's reply was that "there would be no alteration of the original plans."

Parliament voted $600,000 to defray the king's expenses at this end of the journey. The Indian government has appropriated $5,625,000. Another $15,000,000 will be squandered by the native rulers in "official" expenses, which must come from the pockets of the common people in increased taxes.

The reason: It is the English government's policy that 300,000,000 whipped and subjugated Asiatics must not be permitted to forget that Britannia not only rules the waves, but also has a strangle hold on India.
