and be happy the rest of your life. There's no satisfaction like that born of the knowledge that you have a home of your own. And if you'll follow our advice and Build Now, you will always be satisfied that you exercised good judgment. We believe this after watching the lumber market for years. Not in years have we been able to offer such excellent grades for all classes of construction—lumber of real quality. This is not bargain counter lumber, for it has a fixed market value, but by keeping pace with the times and buying only from manufacturers who mill with the most improved machinery we have secured absolutely the best values our money could buy. If you're interested we want to figure with you.

LAY WELL THE FOUNDATION

WE ARE pleased to announce that we have secured for our readers a series of articles on "How to Build Up Your Home Town," written specially for the Herald by Charles K. Holmberg, the first of which appears in today's issue.

Mr. Holmberg is the commissioner of the department of health and civic beauty of the city of Grand Junction, Colorado, which is operating under the model commission form of government. Grand Junction is termed the "Freeest City in America," and Mr. Holmberg is directly identified with the development of the city under commission government, and eminently qualified to assist the people of this city, with his advice, in making Klamath Falls the ideal city of the Pacific coast.

It is admitted by all that the location of Klamath Falls is ideal for the building of a beautiful city, and every thing points to a bright future. We have made a few mistakes, but we are as yet just at the beginning, and it is not too late to start over and lay the foundation here for a city such as we can be proud to call our home, and one that will be spoken of with pride, not only on the Pacific coast, but throughout the United States. We ask every property owner and citizen of Klamath Falls to join with the Herald in working for a beautiful, free city.

AMBITION TO OWN A FARM

THAT an unquenchable ambition to own and operate a farm should animate every agricultural student was the belief of Dr. James Withycombe, expressed in an address before the students of the O. A. M. Agricultural Club, on "The Outlook of Agriculture." "German farmers, under Raitfelsen system, did a business last year," he said, "of $1,524,368,939." His address was, in part, as follows:

"The field of agriculture should appeal strongly to the young man, because of its broad scope for applied science and its sure financial reward. Every student of the college of agriculture should have an unquenchable ambition to own and operate a farm. Every student of agriculture may not have the means to own and operate a farm just as he would like, but as soon as practicable he should lay the foundation for his life's work upon the farm. This may be hard at first, but with a close adherence to the true principles of modern farming, which means better stock, better seed selection, and better methods of soil conservation, success will surely come sooner or later.

"Better farming is a national problem. The need of the hour is for trained men upon the farms to lead the way for a greater national agricultural development. For years an abnormal condition between our rural and urban population has been steadily developing until today we are almost confronted with a national crisis as to what to do with our excess of city and town population. It is estimated that within forty years we shall have a population of 200,000,000 people. That means that practically every acre under cultivation today must produce double what it is doing at present, an imperative need of making two blades of grass grow where but one grew before. Thus the demand for agricultural products is assured.

Agriculture needs men for leadership in agricultural thought and activity, and it is expected that this college shall do its share in supplying this class of men for the farms of Oregon. The field for leadership is broad and open. We need men, not only possessed with the art of making two blades of grass grow where but one grew before, but men with the ability to organize, to prevent economic wastes. The matter of crop distribution presents one of the greatest agricultural problems of today. Note the waste annually occurring in our state. It is estimated that the farms of Oregon produced last year commodities approximately valued at $124,000,000. Fully half of this found its way to the channels of trade, and 50 percent of this was consumed in the cost of distribution. In other words, it cost the farmers $31,000,000 to market $62,000,000 worth of produce. This tremendous marginal difference, between what the producer receives and what the consumer pays, must be reduced. Conservative, intelligent agricultural organizations are the solution of the problem.

"Agriculture, for its highest achievement, needs and must have cheaper money. The German farmers have perhaps worked out the best system for this purpose, in what is known as the Raitfelsen system. Last year the farmers operating under this system did a business representing $1,524,368,939. It would be well if students in agriculture at this college would give thought to this form of organization, with the hope that when they go out upon farms they may at least give intelligent assistance in the organization of similar systems, or modified forms of the same. It is acknowledged in Germany that the Raitfelsen system of rural credit extension has lifted German agriculture from an impoverished peasant husbandry to an intelligent, progressive and prosperous agriculture.

"The value of organization is in evidence through the work of the grange. Practically every law, both state and national, for the betterment of agriculture secured its initial suggestion from the grange. Since the grange has been so phenomenally successful in elevating the social and intellectual standard of the farmer, we should be encouraged that other organizations, such as the Educational Co-operative Farmers' Union and Rural Credit Extension, should work equally as well towards the financial interests of the farmer.

"The outlook for agriculture is indeed flattering. Its greatest need, as before stated, is for men of thought and action, men full of inspiration and love for rural life, and with a desire and determination to help solve its various problems. Agriculture in Oregon is likened into a vast grain field, ready for the reapers. The outlook of the farm should be at least encouraging to this body of virile young men. The state and nation need you in the field of agriculture to help solve our greatest national problem."
