HOW TO BUILD UP YOUR HOME TOWN

Simplified Municipal Government By
Chas. K. Holmberg

The problem of local government confronts every American city, large and small, and its correct solution will undoubtedly greatly advance the best interests of the community and "boost" its upbuilding. The health, safety, comfort and convenience of every citizen necessarily depend upon the way and manner the local government is administered.

In the general civic awakening all over the land the people are beginning to see that a municipality is nothing more nor less than a business institution in which every citizen is a stockholder, and that the vocation of looking after city affairs is not a question of party politics or individual profit, but a matter of patriotism, fitness and business ability. In order to secure the best results in the way of improved service and reduced taxes the same simplified and business-like methods must be adopted by municipalities that have brought the marvelous success to the private corporations of the business world.

European cities and towns have long since been redeemed from corrupt and partisan rule, and will never again return to the old order of things. American municipalities are waking up to the fact that the government of a town or city is a matter of business and not politics. Much of the misrule and corruption in municipal government is undoubtedly due to slack methods and unbusiness-like systems of administration.

The trouble with the old system of municipal government is that responsibility is so divided among councilmen, aldermen, boards and officers that no one is really responsible for anything. The result has been confusion, corruption and a wasteful expenditure of public funds. There are no political problems involved in city affairs; hence the business way of conducting a municipality is to absolutely eliminate partisanship, and so concentrate all authority that the responsibility of every act and every expenditure can be easily fixed.

Simplified city government in America was first temporarily instituted in the city of Galveston, Texas, immediately after the great flood, when the dire necessities of the situation there demanded it. So successful did it prove that it was made permanent, and other cities began to take notice and investigate. From its successful exemplification in the capital of Iowa it has been called the "Des Moines plan." It is now generally known as the commission form. By this simplified plan three or five commissioners are elected by the city at large, and each commissioner is the head of a distinctive department, each of which embraces the whole city. The commissioners constitute the city council and meet as such in transacting the business of the city as a whole. Each commissioner is held responsible for the work of his department, and is subject to recall if negligent of his duties or incompetent to fill the place satisfactorily to the majority of the electors. All money appropriated to his department is expended under his personal direction. If he wastes the funds of his department there is no shifting the responsibility.

More than 150 small cities in the West have adopted the commission plan, and a few scattered cities of the South and East have taken up this form of simplified municipal government. It has been fully demonstrated, wherever given a fair trial, to be a success. It has put the professional politician and conscienceless public grafter out of business, and resulted in a more efficient and economical local government. It has facilitated the transaction of public business. No city that has adopted this system has shown any desire to return to the old conditions. It is the kind of local self-government that will find favor with the people everywhere as soon as it becomes more generally known and understood.

Every city that has tried the commission form of government has found that it is more responsive to the wishes of the people. It gives the citizens absolute control of their home government, and vesting all power in a commission of five or three men, as the case may be, responsibility is easily placed. Partisan politics are eliminated, all nominations for commissioners being made by petition. No commissioner owes his nomination or election to any political party boss. Coupled with the commission form are the referendum, initiative and recall.

The commission plan of municipal government is undoubtedly the best that has yet been devised for our smaller cities and towns. It gives home rule; it fixes responsibility, and reduces municipal government to a simple business basis. Its advantages are so manifest that the writer believes, it is only a question of time until every progressive city will have adopted this plan of conducting its municipal affairs. Its general adoption will tend to the upbuilding of American cities and towns and the betterment of civic conditions.
