EASTERN OREGON CORN CROP AS PROFIT MAKER

Low Moisture Consumer, Permits of Thorough Cultivation and Moisture Conservation, and May Be Used as Substitute for Summer Fallow

Special to The Herald

COVALLIS, April 8.—"In Eastern Oregon one of the greatest advantages of the corn crop is that it is a very low moisture consumer, and since it will permit thorough cultivation, it may be used as a substitute crop in place of the summer fallow," said Prof. H. D. Scudder, head of the O. A. C. agronomy department, in discussing the results of the corn breeding experiments at the college.

"This gives a return for the handling of the land," he continued, "getting rid of the weeds and leaving the ground in nearly as good a condition for the wheat crop to follow as would the costly summer fallow."

"Grown in this way on the dry farming lands, corn may be pastured with pigs and bring as good or better profit than the wheat crop itself. Though the summer fallow cannot be done away with altogether, in the more favorable years and in those parts where the rainfall is higher, it may largely replace the summer fallow."

"In the irrigated sections of Eastern Oregon, and throughout the humid sections of Western Oregon, corn can be replaced by no other plant as a green feed in the late summer and as silage throughout the winter. These facts have led the college to devote much time during the past five years to corn breeding. The idea has been to develop two varieties, one especially for the production of forage for green feed or silage, much needed in the dairy industry throughout Oregon; and another variety to produce an early maturing ear, which will ripen and dry sufficiently to store and use for early fall feeding, or to pasture off with pigs, and that yet will give a yield of grain comparing favorably with other grains.

"Foundation stocks for these two purposes were developed in variety trials by the introduction of a number of the hardest and earliest maturing corns secured in different parts of the United States, the Minnesota No. 13 and the Minnesota No. 23 proving the best. They have been planted in separate fields, the best quality of high breeding being secured to begin with, and for two years individual plant selections have been made and ear row planting tests carried out. This resulted in marked improvement in the qualities of these varieties for Oregon conditions."

"The pedigree breeding will result in decided addition to the agricultural production of the state, it is believed. That these varieties are successful where tried is attested by the score of letters received requesting seed at any price. Professor Myslop, who is working with me on the corn breeding, and I are persuaded that this is due entirely to the tested merits of the corn. In 1910 there were sent out small samples of the best. It is the results of these tests which have created a demand for the seed last year and again this year far in excess of the ability of the college to satisfy it."

W. A. Calkins, who has for some time been keeper of the records for the O. K. Transfer company, has resigned, and his place will be taken by Robert Mitchell, formerly of the White Pelican hotel.
