TALK ABOUT LUMBER LASTING--
Why, it is about as durable as anything on this earth. Quoting from bulletin 100, issued by the Iowa State College in 1908—we find "a white pine homestead site erected in 1894 was visited and found to be giving good service. It was apparently good for a number of years yet." Think of it, 18 years old—and used in a silo. In another instance we were shown a recent photo of an old English block house on San Juan Islands in Puget Sound, built in 1860, on which the red cedar shingles are apparently as good as when laid. But if you are hesitating about using wood for your home there are plenty of illustrations as to its durability right here at home. Houses built before you were born are still good. Don't be fooled about first costs—come in and see our lumber and talk it over.

HOW TO BUILD UP YOUR HOME TOWN
Every Town Should Have a Playground
BY
Chas. H. Holmberg

Whatever tends to make life more desirable and enjoyable; whatever goes to improve the home surroundings, and especially whatever promotes and develops the best in the children of the community, should be considered essential in the upbuilding of the home town.
The first children's playground in the United States was established about twenty-five years ago with money left by the late Senator Sharon of Nevada for the improvement of Golden Gate Park in San Francisco; but it is only within more recent years that other cities and towns have awakened to the wisdom of providing playgrounds in connection with public education and development of character. Today a great playground movement is sweeping the whole country, and the community that fails to provide for its young people an adequate number of places for play and recreation may be considered out of the line of progress. Playgrounds, as well as parks, should be considered just as much of a necessity to a city as a health department or other public institutions for the protection and upbuilding of the community.
While the movement for children's playgrounds has become a part of the general plan of civic improvement in our large cities, the common opinion among the people is that public playgrounds are not needed in the smaller cities or towns. This is an erroneous idea, as can well be proved by any of the places that have established playgrounds for the children.
No argument is necessary to prove that playgrounds are beneficial to child life and child development. Their good cannot be measured any more than can the effects of pure air and sunlight. A visit to a well-equipped playground, crowded with happy children, all engaged in health giving muscle building, fun loving play, will convince any observing, thinking man or woman that the playground is a form of physical and social insurance that no community should be without.
It is a rare instance indeed where the public school ground affords as large a play space as it should have. In England it is held that no school is complete unless it has a playground of at least thirty feet square for each child in attendance. The Public Association of Cambridge, Mass., in a recent report, declared that "a minimum play space of 40 feet square per pupil adjacent to every public school building" was needed to complete the educational equipment of that city.

The small city or town should secure the land for parks and playgrounds while it can be bought at a nominal price. The difference between a bare vacant lot or block for a playground and a properly developed playground, with park improvement and beautification around it, will be quickly noted and appreciated by the children. The influence upon child life of the improved playground is a lasting one, and its value to the community cannot be estimated.
Whatever goes to make a happy childhood prepares for the best things of mature life. A child that has lived in the sunshine and is brought up amidst pleasant surroundings will meet the world and its problems and duties with a brighter mind and a happier disposition than one who carries memories of early gloom and childhood disappointments.
It has been well said that environment makes the man, and statistics prove the beneficial influence of the playground upon boys who by reason of degrading environments or a lack of right social training are inclined to wrong doing or petty misdemeanors. Establish more playgrounds, and our cities and towns will have less need of juvenile courts. Judge Lindsay of Denver, whose work as a juvenile judge is known all over our country, says the playground has proved to be "an economy to the city, in that it lessens crime among children."
One of the inherent and undeniable rights of childhood is the right to play, and it is the duty of the modern community to provide its children with playgrounds worthy of the name. If, in the upbuilding of the town, the building of the citizen is neglected, the foundation will be unsafe and the superstructure, necessarily, must be shaky. When this truth becomes accepted, a great economic problem will have been solved. Soon the world must wake up to the fact that the most valuable asset of any country—that most worthy of conservation and protection—is its boys and girls. To see that they are well borned, decently homed, properly trained and educated, and given an environment that will tend to the making of men and women, sound in mind and strong of body—this is the paramount duty of the patriotic citizen of today.

Christian Revival
The meeting last night at the Christian revival was one of the best of the series, and the evangelist promises that each meeting will be worth while from now on to the close. A large audience was present and the message on the "Last Payment" was a thriller. The chorus work deserves special mention. Each night some of the old songs are sung, and last night "Pull for the Shore" was sung after a description of the Titanic disaster. The interchangeable songs are also enjoyed. This service begins at 7:45 sharp, and lasts about twenty minutes.
Tonight the evangelist's theme will be "Absolute Certainties." This is the last full week of the meetings. Come tonight.
Mrs. Ellen Hunter of Portland will speak briefly at the close of the services.

H. C. Brodie, assistant secretary of the land board, has been sent here to inspect the construction work, which is going ahead rapidly. Contractor Gerdetz has a large force of men busy on the dam and opening the canal.
