TELLS HOW U. S. TIMBER IS SOLD

SECRETARY WILSON GIVES INFORMATION RELATIVE TO HOMESTEAD ENTRIES, RANGER STATIONS AND TIMBER SOLD

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 19.—In compliance with a senate resolution calling for information relative to homestead entries, ranger stations and timber sold on national forests, Secretary Wilson of the department of Agriculture, has made the following response:

Number of applications which have been made for the listing of lands for homestead entries within national forests under the act of June 11, 1906, and the number of applications which have been allowed, with the number which have been disallowed under said act from June 11, 1906, to May 1, 1912:

Applications made, 26,297; applications allowed, 19,695; applications disallowed (including those voluntarily withdrawn by applicant and those embracing lands covered by entries or withdrawals of record), 12,991; applications pending, 2,611; number of ranger headquarters which have been created in the national forests since the passage of the act of June 11, 1906, 5,740.

Amount of timber which has been sold from the national forest within the last three years and the price of the same, and whether or not said timber has been sold at or below the usual market price of such timber: The prices charged for national forest timber are determined in accordance with the act of June 4, 1897 (30 Stat., 11). This law requires that timber be sold for not less than its appraised value; in other words, what such timber is actually worth under current market conditions. Prices are, therefore, determined by a careful calculation of the cost of logging and manufacture, and the average selling price of the manufactured product in the locality. The cost of logging and manufacture and a liberal operating profit, ranging from 10 to 40 per cent, are deducted from the average selling price of lumber to arrive at a fair market valuation of the standing timber.

The rates so determined are seldom if ever lower, and frequently are higher than the prevailing prices for privately owned timber of the same quality and at the same distance from market. In nearly every locality where this is true, prices of private stumpage have been largely fixed by custom and are often controlled by the lumber interests. In many of the national forest regions there are still large quantities of timber on unperfected homesteads and timber and stone claims. As these claims are perfected the timber is usually offered for sale, and often is purchased at very low prices because of the ignorance of the claimant as to its actual market value and his inability to negotiate successfully with shrewd business men. The amount of timber sold under such conditions is enough in many localities largely to influence the prevailing stumpage prices.

In regions where private timber is owned by lumbermen or others who appreciate its value, national forest prices compare closely with those obtained in private sales of stumpage of similar quality and accessibility.

The stumpage prices on national forests have not restricted the purchase of such timber in small quantities by local operators who supply settlers and industries in the region. During the last fiscal year 97 per cent of all sales made, 5,471 separate transactions, were for amounts of timber under $500 in value. During the fiscal year 1910 5,194 such sales were made, and during the fiscal year 1909, 4,854 sales of this size. The steady increase in the number of these small purchases indicates more general use of national forest timber by local operators.

The prices placed upon national forest timber have not raised the cost of lumber manufactured by local mills to the settlers whom such mills supply. Such appraisals always permit the operator a liberal profit, considering fully the necessary expensive methods of manufacture in small mills. The stumpage price forms always not more than one-sixth and often not more than one-eighth of the price which the settler pays for the manufactured lumber. The difference is made up by labor bills, cost of equipment and maintenance, and the profit which the operator takes out of the business. The forest service has no control over the prices at which the manufactured lumber from small mills is sold to settlers. Such prices are fixed by the millmen quite arbitrarily in localities away from the railroads, and by competition with outside lumber in localities within reach of the railroads.

While the prices of national forest timber, therefore, are sometimes higher than prevailing prices in the locality, this is due to the adoption of market standards in accordance with the requirements of the law. Furthermore, it does not affect the prices paid for lumber by consumers.

LAW ARGUED TO PROTECT SLAUGHTER OF COWS

Livestock Association Wants Legislation to Conserve Cattle—All States Will Be Urged to Adopt Legislation Toward This End

PORTLAND, June 19.—Oregon will be urged to adopt a law in conserving livestock and to increase production of cattle in particular, forbidding the slaughter of any heifer or female calf for three years, unless the animal is by nature made incapable of propagation. All other states of the Union will be requested to adopt similar measures, as a result of the draft of a statute accepted this morning by the National Livestock Exchange Association, just before it adjourned its annual convention.

H. H. Fletcher, delegate from Indianapolis, submitted the form of law which is to be pressed throughout the country. He did so following an address on livestock conservation. The speaker pointed out that Argentina has a law forbidding the slaughter of any cow under the age of seven years. If the several states should adopt similar measures for three years, Fletcher held that the increase in beef would be enormous, and the cost of the invaluable food product would be brought down all over America.

D. O. Lively preceded the Indiana man on the speaking program, taking for his talk, "Publicity." In this talk the Portland livestock man urged conservation in livestock by protecting the female of the various food species along similar lines to the propoganda outlined in the bill to be presented to all the state legislatures.

Sentiment among the commission men is exceedingly strong for effective conservation work. They believe that if some prohibition against the slaughtering heifer calves was adopted, if for only three years, the impetus given breeding would be so great that thereafter the average stock of the country would be maintained at a much greater standard than now. In some sections heifer calves are killed for veal ruthlessly, with the result that cows have to be brought from other parts of the state or country.

St. Joseph, Mo., got the convention for next year, and a St. Joseph man was named for president. A. F. Daly, who has been treasurer for some time, was elected president; W. A. Moody of East St. Louis was chosen treasurer of the association, and R. P. Woodbury was re-elected secretary. O. M. Plummer of this city was chosen as the Portland vice president of the association.

D. O. Lively came in for a round of praise in connection with the convention, as the annual meeting came to a close, and general resolutions of thanks were also drafted for the Portland livestock men, business interests and the women as a whole.
