KLAMATH FALLS, OREGON
MONDAY, JULY 1, 1912

FRED T. SANDERSON

IT IS probable that no death among the prominent men of Klamath Falls has caused so great a feeling of regret among the entire community as that of Fred T. Sanderson, ex-mayor of this city. Mr. Sanderson was a big man in public affairs. His many years in the management of the business of Klamath Falls brought him into closer relation with the people than could have been possible in any other position.

He was a man of strong personality and unlimited resource, who by his indomitable will drew people to him with an irresistible force. Those who worked with him and those who have opposed his policies in public affairs knew best the greatness of the man, and not one of these but appreciated the strength of character of the man. He was a worthy foe as well as a valuable friend.

He had the distinction of being at the head of Klamath Falls during its formative period, when the foundation was laid for the great city that is to be builded here in the years to come. He was a man who ruled absolutely, and whatever credit is due for the progress of the city during the past four years belongs rightfully to him. Klamath Falls has sustained a great loss in the death of Fred T. Sanderson.

LA FOLLETTE'S OPINION OF ROOSEVELT

AN EDITORIAL signed by Senator Robert M. La Follette, dealing with his views on Theodore Roosevelt and the progressive cause, is the feature of the last issue of the senator's weekly. La Follette says in part:

"Until Roosevelt came into the open as a candidate there was a strong and rapidly growing progressive movement within the republican party. It was based upon clearly defined principles. It stood for the best modern political thought on fundamental democracy. It had assumed national proportions. It was united. Into this movement, when it gave promise of national success, Roosevelt projected his ambition to be president a third time. He spent weeks carefully planning a 'spontaneous call' for himself. He responded by announcing that he would be a receptive candidate. This candidacy began to drag. He and his friends were in despair.

"Then came his defeat in North Dakota. He became desperate. An enormous campaign fund was raised. Headquarters were opened in New York, Washington, Chicago and the states East and West. Newspaper writers were engaged at large pay to boom his candidacy. Special trains were hired and the 'receptive candidate' started in frantic pursuit of the nomination.

"In the history of American politics there has never been in primary campaign for a president an approach to the extravagant expenditures made in his campaign. Men notoriously identified with the steel trust and the harvester trust became his most active supporters. Leading reactionaries, standpatters and political bosses of the Hanna and Quay sort became his closest political friends and representatives in many states.

"A number of the newer recruits to the republican progressive cause—men who before 1909 with two or three exceptions, had been opposed to the progressive movement—became the noisiest supporters of Roosevelt.

"It mattered not to them that Roosevelt had co-operated with Aldrich on legislation during the entire seven years he was president. They forgot that when Roosevelt was out of office and in Africa, through the united efforts of men who for years had been fighting special interests, the progressive cause became a national movement; that Roosevelt was for Taft in 1910, when Taft was denouncing the progressives as 'pirates and traitors'; that he waited until a little more than a year ago, balancing the chances before deciding whether to cast his lot with the progressives in this presidential year, counted for nothing with the class of progressives who wanted 'to win'—not a real progressive victory, just a victory.

"And they did win precisely that kind of a victory. They carried overwhelmingly the great standpat states of Illinois and Pennsylvania. That stamped the Roosevelt candidacy with its true character. No true progressive could have secured anything like such a vote in either of the two states. It had, however, the outward sign of success, that catches the crowd. It enabled him to win in two or three really progressive states. It did not enable him to secure the nomination which would have compromised the progressive movement and defeated real achievement for years.

"Upon Theodore Roosevelt and his followers rests the responsibility of having divided the progressives in their first national convention. Stimulated by an overmastering desire to win, they denounced loyalty to conviction and principles as stubborn selfishness.

"In the convention they put forward no platform—no issues. They made no fight against the reactionary platform adopted. They substituted vulgar personalities and the coarse epithets of the prize ring for the serious consideration of great economic problems, and for the time being brought ridicule and contempt upon a great cause.

"But the progressive movement does not consist of a few self-constituted leaders. It consists of millions of thoughtful citizens drawn together by common belief in certain principles. They will permit no combination of special interests and political expediency to secure control of the progressive cause, which is ultimately to redeem democracy and restore government to the people."
