NO NEED TO DIE, SAYS FRENCHMAN

ALL YOU HAVE TO DO TO LIVE FOREVER IS TO MAKE FRIENDS WITH GOOD MICROBES AND KEEP 'EM IN FIGHTING TRIM

PARIS, July 22.—If you would live forever, make friends with the good glycobacters. So declares the eminent Dr. Elle Metchnikoff, the Pasteur institute scientist, who has been delving for many years into the mysteries of why men grow old.

The human body, Dr. Metchnikoff, in common with scientists generally, declares, is the battleground, night and day, between the good and the bad microbes. When the bad microbes gain an engagement you're a sick man. When the good microbes turn the tables, you get well. But, on the other hand, if the bad microbes rout the good microbes so completely that they cannot rally, you're a gonorr and the undertaker has to be called in to take your measure.

Such is your everyday life. Now, knowing that this terrible battle is forever going on inside of one, Dr. Metchnikoff, by a very simple line of reasoning, concluded that if the good microbes could be fed up, could be kept hale and hearty and always ready for a victorious scrap with the enemy, man would naturally live longer than ordinarily he would. "So he went to work to find out what food the good microbes like best. It proved to be sugar.

Incidentally the white-bearded scientist discovered that intestinal decomposition was the principal reason for man's growing old. What would stop, or retard, this putrefaction?

Everyone knows that acids combat decomposition—that's why housewives put a small quantity of vinegar on meats to keep them from spoiling. We must do the same thing with the digestive tube; we must introduce into the system an acid-producing microbe.

This was a simple enough operation for Dr. Metchnikoff, but he found that the microbes died of starvation because, depending upon sugar to keep them alive. So the bad microbes had little difficulty in putting the feeble microbes out of business and continuing their nefarious work of provoking putrefaction, senility and death.

Obviously, the thing to do was to find either another species of warrior in the microbe world, or a food which would keep the one already discovered going. Sugar, absorbed by the system, is not enough, so Dr. Metchnikoff discovered in the intestines of a dog, a lowly, ordinary canine dog, the very thing he was after: a microbe capable of producing the sugar required for the sustenance of the good microbes. This microbe, the dog's gift to man, is the "glycobacter." It forms itself out of the starchy foods—potatoes, etc.—and quite easily reaches, in all its fighting vigor, the lower intestines, the seat of battle. The bad microbes, pitted against the good glycobacters, have no show whatever; and other conditions being favorable, there is no reason why man, partaking of enough substances producing this kind of microbe, should not live far beyond the ordinary mortal.

"But why do so many dogs die young?" Dr. Metchnikoff was asked. "Although the microbe was discovered in the intestinal flora of the dog," replied the savant patiently, "it does not mean that all dogs have them. To the contrary. The microbe is vigorously, and, sooner or later, successfully, combated by the detestable regime followed by most members of the canine tribe."

Anyway, though the test has still to be applied to man, upon animals physically more or less similar to the human species, it has met with considerable success, and even through this discovery, man is not destined to live forever, it has been pointed out that his general health may be considerably bettered, for life this

PEOPLE YOU OUGHT TO KNOW

SUNNY JIM CLAIMS SQUATTER'S RIGHTS

Some years ago there was a peculiar brand of smile discovered and heralded throughout the land. And it was perpetuated in the present generation by a young man who gets his mail in Klamath Falls, Oregon.

All of this is ancient history to pioneer residents of this city (that is, people who have lived here more than eighteen months). But there are those who do not know just how "Sunny Jim" Force first made his appearance as a smile perpetrator, and, by the way, there is a wide difference of opinion even among those who profess to know.

One of the stories has it that Mr. Force was born with a happy smile on his rotund countenance.

Another, and this seems to be the most authentic version, is that it was acquired, and here's the story:

Picture a hot day in Idaho. Imagine the sun coming down at the rate of a quart of perspiration a minute. To the right and to the left conjure the picture of town lots staked off, and in the foreground dig up a picture of two men in consultation. Label one a Townsite Promoter and the other a paving contractor.

Now the stage is set for the first act. Here comes the dialogue: "Why can't you finish this paving job?" demands the Townsite Promoter, hereafter known as "T. P."

"Steam roller's busted," shortly replies the Contractor, hereafter known as "C."

"Can't you get some sort of a roller, weight it down with rocks, or something, and use horses to pull it?"

"No rocks in the country."

"Well, then, think up something else. This paving job simply must be completed, because we have some important lot buyers due here in a few days."

An improvised roller was put in service, but the weight was lacking. Then along comes our hero. He had been delayed en route because of inconsiderate "shacks," sometimes known as freight brakemen on railway trains.

But he arrived in the niche of time, and was forthwith seated on top of that improvised roller. Immediately all trouble disappeared. There was plenty of weight, and any person who refused to work his best in the face of that smile was not considered fit to live.

"Sunny Jim" Force became a factor in the paving situation in the West from then on, but he was promoted from ballast, and is now a member of the city council of Klamath Falls.

"Not duly elected to the office," you reply.

Doesn't have to be. He's a squatter. He's been holding down the job for two years and a half, and has only missed two meetings. Therefore he's a member, the eleventh member, 'tis true, but a member nevertheless, and he has just held a convention at which he nominated himself for another term. He will be elected, because he was never known to turn himself down.

Anyway, Herman Force has worn a smile from that day to this. Now when was "that" day?

lengthened and his effectiveness increased many fold.

Dr. Metchnikoff is being likened to a modern Columbus, a sage who stands on the same footing with Pasteur, Darwin and Lister.

Interlocutor—Why do you consider Chief Smith the most remarkable man in this city?

Bones—"Cause he can tell jes who ob de gals dat walk down town nights after 8 o'clock ought to be home, an' widout looking at dere teeth."

Interlocutor—Do you mean to tell me that you can tell the age of a woman by looking at her teeth?

Bones—Yes, sub.

Interlocutor—Explain to me the process.
