ited Klamath Falls for two months this summer, and returned to her home within the past fortnight. Two brothers also survive, Malcolm Cox, now living in the state of Washington. He is older than Horace, while the other brother, Edwin, is younger, and continues in the Klamath County High School, where he has gained much standing as a debater. The older brother, Malcolm, graduated some time ago from Oregon Agricultural College at Corvallis, later teaching there for a time, until his removal to Washington.

Mrs. Melissa Brandenburg, mother of Mrs. Maude Cox, stepmother of the children of Dr. Cox, was, during their early life, matron of the Klamath Indian Agency, and from that time until the present, had been closely attached to them, having the care of the two young boys, Horace and Edwin, for a long period. She spoke very highly of Horace, whose lovable traits had so long been a source of comfort and gratification to her.

Horace, she said, was of serious disposition, and while young in years, was often sought for his advice to his young friends, and his brother Edwin often asked his opinion in matters about which he was in doubt.

The burial of the young man will be at Salem, where rest the remains of his father, and mother, but this morning it had not been determined when the funeral party would start north. Jay Cox, of Salem, a cousin of the late Dr. Horace Cox, is making arrangements at Salem for the interment. Malcolm Cox will probably meet the other relatives at Salem, while Mrs. Dunning wired this morning to Mrs. Brandenburg that she would be here from Berkeley tomorrow.

Edwin Cox has been away in the Paisley country on an outing with Postmaster Brandenburg and Floyd Brandenburg, and this party is expected to be here this evening, returning from Paisley, which they left August 17th, by the north fork of the Sprague River. Trace of them was found at Bly, where they passed on their way home, and a runner has been sent from Bly after them, to tell them of the sad end of young Cox.

A marriage license was issued this afternoon to Elmer Moore and Lydia Jane Parker. Mr. Moore is well known in Poe Valley, where he has resided for a number of years. Miss Parker resides in Merrill. She formerly resided in Grants Pass.

BALTIMORE ORATOR WAS TOO MOUTHY

In the department called "The Interpreter's House" in the September American Magazine, appear a number of interesting stories of the Chicago and Baltimore conventions. Following is a story about one of the speakers at the Baltimore convention:

"Another defender of the principles of democracy was a young person from California, who by virtue of his many excellencies, is an officer of an organization known as the Order of Eagles. He was the happy possessor of a voice that could be heard for half a mile at sea. Because of the extraordinary noise issuing from him this champion caught the attention of the crowd and held it while he was saying everything of any interest he had to say, which was not long. Unfortunately for him, having concluded his speech, he fell a victim to a common and fatal disease of convention orators. He couldn't stop. He couldn't back off the stage. His oratorical legs got crossed and refused to carry him out of danger. No crowd is as quick or as merciless as a convention audience in detecting the approach of such a predicament and hastening it. A great wave of gayety swept over the house. The orator seemed perfectly amazed at the sudden change in the temper of the convention. A second before they were applauding him. Now they were laughing at him. The sweat began to roll down his cheeks and melt his collar to a pulp. He raised his hands in prayer to the crowd. He implored them to be silent owhile he assured them of the glories of California and his own loyalty to the democracy. They only laughed the more. Eventually, finding thath is voice was lost in the tulmult, he inflated his cheeks and tried to shout out his speech, word by word, like the cork in a popgun. This device almost broke up the convention in a delirium of happiness. In the end he retreated unheard. The picture of this miserable man will not soon pass from memory, as 'rising, falling, hoping, despairing,' he was swept from the stage. He took the platform a number of times afterward, for these bad speakers are dauntless, but every time he appeared he was welcomed with such shrieks of gayety that not even the chairman ever knew what were the vast thoughts he sought to deliver."

in gaining the attention and holding the interest of a crowd for his arguments. But behind all these accomplishments, which a dishonest man might possess in an equal degree with an honest man, as accounting for the almost religious character of the Bryan worship in the West, is the unassailable honesty of Bryan's public and private life. He may not be a very wise man. His political mistakes have shown an abysmal ignorance of modern industrial and economic conditions. He calls himself a radical, but he is no more radical than Taft, as his cheerful concurrence in the flabby Baltimore platform shows. But no one has successfully questioned his good faith toward those who follow him. And when he is attacked he can always answer, 'Look at my enemies.'"

CLATAWA PEOPLE MAY GET ACTIVE

When the coming social season opens it is expected that the Clatawa Club will be once more to the fore with its pleasant functions. Last winter the organization had a series of dances which were given at one of the leading hotels, and were a distinct feature of the gaieties of the cold months.

Members of the organization last year, who numbered something like a score, included Perry O. De Lap, Harry Goeller, Philip J. Sinnott, A. Oehler, J. C. Cleghorn, Albert Loewe, Hugo Loewe, J. P. Brat, Lawrence Mehaffey and Frank Sargent.

THE SECRET OF BRYAN'S POWER

The following is taken from the September American Magazine:

"People in the East so often ask the question, What is the secret of Bryan's power, that they should be answered. It is not a secret at all. In the West and Southwest thousands upon thousands look upon him as their friend and protector. They have been brought in close contact with him, and they believe in him. Delegates to the convention from these parts of the country are fully aware of this, and they trembled at the thought of what might happen to their political prospects if they should display openly the hatred which most of the democratic leaders feel for him and so challenge him into entering their districts in revenge. Bryan has everything that makes a successful popular leader. He has that same force of character that is so conspicuous in Root, but in his case it is augmented by other natural gifts and by great histrionic attainments. He is blessed with one of the finest imaginable voices for public speaking, much readiness in debate and unexampled boldness. But he has not been content with these gifts. He has practised all the arts and devices of oratory, studied effects, learned his audiences until he has become unequaled among American public men
