Norris was employed as a firema a the engine room of the Weed Lumer company's plant. The huge on gines are fed with sawdust, and during his work he was often called upon to go into the bins and start the sawdust toward the chutes through which it fed into the fires. It was in doing this that he came to his death. The sawdust started with a rush, and before he could escape was buried many feet deep in the dust.

The accident was observed at once and men started digging him out. This required nearly an hour, and when found life was extinct.

Mr. and Mrs. Norris are well known in this city, and are highly respected.
