The assassination occurred in front of the office of the minister of the interior on Puerto del Sol, a square in the very center of this city. Stepping behind Canalejas, the assassin fired twice. He committed suicide before the arrival of the police.

At the time of the shooting the square was crowded with people. Great confusion followed. Military guards attempted to clear the square and the throng stampeded.

Fever Epidemic Is Causing Great Fear

Postoffice at Chiloquin is Closed and a Guard will be Sent There to Maintain a Strict Quarantine

The postoffice at Chiloquin has been closed and a man will be sent there this afternoon by the county court to maintain a strict guard over the place. Scarlet fever has broken out in the family of the postmaster, L. Whittemore, and his bondsmen will be asked to take over the handling of the mail.

All of the mail at present in the postoffice will be fumigated and delivered, but all incoming mail will be distributed in some other place yet to be selected.

Opal Whittemore, 13 years of age, died from the fever yesterday, and other members of the family are stricken.

Because the postoffice has been a general meeting place for residents of that section, it is feared that the epidemic may become general, especially among the Indians of that section.

This is certain on account of the enthusiasm of the players on both teams. Meanwhile those who are interested in basketball are informed that practice will shortly begin at the pavilion.

Desperate Bandit May be in the Klamath Falls Country

Local Bartender Encounters Customer who Acts Suspicious and it is Believed He may be one of Shasta Limited Robbers. Says He will make Escape

A man believed to be one of the two bandits who held up the Shasta limited at Delta last week is somewhere in Klamath Falls.

A bartender in a local saloon declared this afternoon that a man answering closely to the description of the bandit who made his escape when his partner was shot down by a brakeman had bought a drink from him this morning, saying:

"That's the first drink I've had for some time, and I've been giving 'em a good chase."

The customer was covered with mud, and displayed signs of having recently gone through a severe experience. He furtively watched both the front and back door of the saloon as he waited for his drink to be served.

"I am going to beat it," he said, as he left the place. "They'll have to go some if they get me. I know this country like a book."

The hold-up in which it is believed the mysterious stranger was involved occurred thirty-eight miles north of Redding.

The Shasta limited had just taken water at Delta and had started north.

The train had moved scarcely 100 yards when the locomotive ran over a torpedo. The engineer, Frank Wentz, at once stopped the train and a masked man jumped on the footboard of the locomotive and held a revolver at the head of the engineer, ordering him to take his hands off the levers. He stood guard over the engine while two other robbers made their way to the mail car.

One on each side of the car, the two began shooting. The people of Delta ran out of their houses and stores. A few passengers jumped out to see what the trouble was, but were quickly intimidated by the shooting.

The messengers in the mail car, noticing the stopping of the train, and not suspecting robbery, opened the doors on each side, and both robbers entered, seizing the registered mail.

Meantime the head brakeman, Jim Yokum, dropping from the rear of the train, ran back to the town and into Tom Norton's saloon, crying "robbers," and demanding a gun. Norton gave him one and the brakeman returned. Finding the first robber still guarding the engineer, he went up to the robber and deliberately shot him through the throat. The robber fell off the footboard, and is supposed to have died instantly.

His two companions alighted from the mail car on the river side of the train and escaped. One stayed for a while at the mail car, threatening the mail clerk, and the other ran forward calling "Frank." He hesitated a moment when he saw his dead partner beside the engine, and ejaculated: "Who did this?" He then dashed back to the mail car, joined his remaining companion, and the two fled.

No trace of them could be found when the train crew and passengers made a search, and thirty minutes after the torpedo signal the train was under way again for Portland.

For some reason or other, the potato crop of this vicinity has fallen short of expectations, and many of the planters are trying to fathom the cause thereof. Most of them agree, however, that it was owing to the low average temperature of the summer just past, claiming that there was very little good growing weather.

Boise Firm Makes a New Record on Ditch

More than the Amount of Work Required has Been Completed on the Great Irrigation Project

Without bringing any equipment here, Maney Bros., Boise contractors, will complete the contract on the second unit lateral of the Klamath irrigation project easily within the time limit required by the government, according to L. A. Kirchner, sole representative here of the big contracting firm.

Immediately upon being awarded the contract, Maney Bros. secured the co-operation of sub-contractors, and forthwith the work here was started.

The 10 per cent required to be done by the government before December 1st was completed some time ago, and it is estimated that already more than 35 per cent of the work is actually completed.

"We were prepared to put our own equipment on the job in the event of sub-contractors falling up," said L. A. Kirchner, "but this did not seem necessary. If the project continues we will employ the government engineers to supervise the work."
