DeLap Orders Special Recall Election to Be Held Second of June; Resignation Time Has Expired

JURY CONVICTS F. WILLIAMS OF GRAVE OFFENSE

VERDICT SAYS HE SOLD DISEASED MEAT FOR FOOD
Penalty is From $200 to $500 Fine— Sentence Will Be Passed Late This Afternoon by Justice of the Peace Gowen—Jury, Out Late Last Night, Returns a Sealed Verdict Into Court This Morning
Found guilty of selling the meat of a diseased cow for food, Frank Williams of Mills addition faces a fine of from $200 to $500.
He will be sentenced at 6 o'clock by Justice of the Peace E. W. Gowen.
Williams is charged by J. H. Pierce of Shippington with selling the meat of a cow that died from alfalfa bloat to a Shippington boarding house. Testimony was brought out at the trial yesterday that Williams had agreed to haul the carcass of a cow away from the Stiles place in Mills addition in return for the skin.
The owner of the Stiles dairy took the stand to testify that the cow had died of alfalfa bloat, and also of Williams' offer. Later in the day he said he saw Williams hauling a part of the carcass through town.
According to Stiles, Williams told him that he was taking it to Shippington to sell for chicken feed. Williams held that he told him he was going to throw it in the lake.
Williams admitted skinning the cow, but insisted that he gave part of the carcass to his chickens, and throwing the rest away.
The meat that he sold in Shippington, Williams held, was from a heifer belonging to him, which he killed at his place on May 8.
The jury in the case deliberated late last night, and returned a sealed verdict, which was opened by Justice Gowen this morning, and read in court, finding Williams guilty as charged. Members of the jury were Fred Ritchie, G. A. Gentry, J. V. Witt, William Whitlock, S. K. Ogle and J. W. Redfield.
The prosecution was conducted by C. M. O'Neill in the absence of District Attorney John Irwin. Horace Manning appeared for Williams.

WOMEN'S WAGE CAUSES SCRAP

BITTER FIGHT STARTED ON THE FLOOR OF THE PENNSYLVANIA LEGISLATURE WHEN MATTER COMES UP
United Press Service
HARRISBURG, Pa., May 15.—A bitter fight against the proposed law to regulate the conditions and hours of labor of women and children in Pennsylvania by manufacturers and their representatives opened here this afternoon, when the hearings on this bill and the bill to establish a minimum wage commission opened at the state house. Friends and foes of the proposed laws were here today in great numbers, as these hearings are admitted by both sides to be the crucial test put to the legislature to show whether that body will place itself on record as "progressive" along these lines. The hearing was scheduled before the special judiciary committee of the senate. The women and child labor bills were drafted by and child labor bills were drafted by the legislative committee of the Republican state convention, and it was believed by many that they will be favorably acted on. Members of the Progressive party, and certain avowedly progressive Democrats are strongly in favor of the establishment of the proposed minimum wage commission. The majority of the legislators, however, are thought to be opposed to it.
Among those who advocated the passage of all three measures today were Henry G. Wasson of Pittsburg, chairman of the Republican state convention; William Draper Lewis, dean of the University of Pennsylvania Law school; Charles Chute of Philadelphia, secretary of the Pennsylvania Child Labor association, and representatives of similar organizations in New York, Michigan, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois.
