POWER COMPANY IN U. S. COURT

GOVERNMENT CONTROL OF POWER BITTEN IS A QUESTION AT ISSUE—POWER TRUST IS ALLEGED BY ATTORNEYS

United Press Service
DENVER, Colo., July 21.—The right of the government to control power sites and water rights, and to force individuals and corporations to bow to its will in the matter of taking out permits and paying fees for the use of government lands, will be fought out in a case which began in the United States district court here today. The government is trying to force the Central Colorado Power company to take out permits from the forestry service before it uses the forest lands.

It is alleged that Colorado is rapidly drifting into "the arms of the power octopus," and that the state, through its law officers, is unwittingly aiding and abetting the great eastern power concerns by intervening in the case and asking to be heard against the government.

The entire issue of the government and state rights will be involved before the case is finished, and if the government is successful it is understood that similar court proceedings will be immediately instituted in a half dozen other Western states.

The government contends that it is merely acting as a protector of the state and the individuals, and that it is trying to prevent a monopoly of natural resources from which the state of Colorado should receive a huge annual income.

The state has come into the case, it is alleged, through the influence of politicians who are favorable to the monopolist power concerns.

TULE SOIL WILL BE DEMONSTRATED

ENTIRE ROOM AT HIGH SCHOOL WILL BE DEVOTED TO A DISPLAY OF THE PRODUCTS OF THE SWAMP LANDS

Conclusive proof that reclaimed tule lands are highly productive is to be given the public by the Lower Klamath Marsh Land Owners Association during the Central Oregon Development League. This organization has been allotted a room at the high school, and already the work of collecting an exhibit has been started.

Wednesday two men visited the McCormick ranch on Upper Klamath Lake and they brought in some amazing samples. Alfalfa six feet in length, monster radishes and turnips, timothy with twelve-inch heads and splendid alkyke clover, all the products of reclaimed tule land, go far toward proving the assertion of those seeking the reclamation of the tule lands surrounding the Lower Lake.

J. B. Mason and Max A. McCall visited the Nelson ranch at Keno Wednesday, and they also brought in some exhibits. The tule land crop there will be a monster, they say, and Mr. Nelson estimates the oat yield at a hundred bushels to the acre.

Urgo Importance of Missions

United Press Service
CAMDEN, N. J., July 21.—"Importance of Mission Study Classes" was the topic of the principal address today at the sessions of the annual Camden Camp. The Rev. Lawrence Correll of Millville, N. J., was the speaker. He pointed out that the standard of work of missionaries in both home and foreign countries could be increased 50 per cent if the missionaries attend regular classes for from six months to one year previous to their taking up their duties.

New Administration's Men Have Their Doubles Also

Men All Over the Country Write Wilson That They Are Taken For Him. Bryan Says a Whole Line of Occupations Are Represented in His Doubles. None for McAdoo

By BURTON K. STANDISH
(Written for the United Press)

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 21.—The quadriennial crop of "doubles" of newly elected and newly appointed statesmen and heads of the government has set in with a vengeance. As is always the case when a new president takes office, "doubles" of that official are discovered in all parts of the country. And it is the same with the cabinet members and higher government officials. It goes with their jobs to be "doubled" and have their photographs to prove their claim to fame. Some of the "doubles" even come in person to prove that they "look like a statesman."

Of course the president always has the most doubles, and President Wilson is no exception to this rule. Since he was inaugurated, President Wilson has been informed by letter and in person with pictures as exhibits that he has as many "doubles" as he has fingers and toes.

Next to President Wilson Secretary of State Bryan is the most "doubled" man in the present administration. But he had a start on the others because of the great length of time he has been before the public so prominently. Secretary Bryan doesn't at all mind being "doubled." In fact, he admits he gets quite a bit of a laugh out of the situation that arises through having "doubles." He says priests, waiters, cabmen, conductors and policemen have been mistaken for him, and that he has seen many who laid claim to fame by virtue of their resemblance to him, who really bear startling likeness to him. He and Colonel Roosevelt probably have more "doubles" in this country than any other six men in the public eye.

Speaking of his "doubles" the other day, Secretary Bryan said:

"Charles B. Hanford, the actor, is, as would be said in the vernacular, a 'dead ringer' for me. Hanford recently passed himself off at a Grillon banquet as 'W. J. Bryan,' and he didn't have to use any make-up, either. A very good democrat named Wolf, of Texas, who is now dead, impersonated me with great success at a national gathering of Elks, and W. Hawley of Oregon, looks so much like me that he might fool my banker if his voice was more like mine.

"The most humorous case of a 'double,' however, was when a waiter at a Buffalo Club impersonated me by speaking to a number of law school graduates, who were present, and asked him to favor them with a short address. The graduates didn't know the speaker was not me until they read the papers the next day. I afterwards got a copy of the waiter's speech, and it was a pretty good one."

Another amusing incident occurred when Father Nugent of Iowa introduced him to an audience at Creston, Iowa, in 1896. Just as Bryan began speaking two men entered the hall. Father Nugent stood just behind Bryan as the secretary made a short speech. After a few minutes one of the late comers nudged his friend and said: "Why doesn't that fool stop spouting and let Bryan talk."

Secretary of War Garrison says he has dozens of doubles, judging from the way he has been mistaken for other people. Frequently men and women have approached him on the street, grasped his hand, asked him how Alice or Bertha or John or Sam were, and remarked he was looking fine, or poorly, as the case might be. Secretary Garrison follows an invariable rule in such cases. He always replies that so-and-so is doing well, and asks to be remembered, in order to save explanations and apologies.

Secretary of the Navy Daniels has had similar experiences, and has in his desk photographs of a half dozen persons who have sent them to him to prove that they look like him. He says the greatest compliment he ever received was when some one mistook him for Henry Grady.

Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo says he believes it impossible for anyone to claim to be his "double." McAdoo is a modern incarnation, physically, of President Lincoln. He is long and rangy, with the prominent chin and deep-sunken eyes of the Civil War president.

Postmaster Hurlison is another cabinet member who claims to be immune from doubles. But his friends in turn declare he is a Henry Clay visage, with Daniel Webster touches here and there. All members of the new administration take their "doubling" good naturedly. They humbly bow to the duties assumed by American statesmen, prominent among which in this land of the free is having innumerable doubles. During the last administration, doubles cropped out frequently. About every fat man in twenty who visited Washington talked of his "resemblance" to President Taft. President Cleveland, another portly president, had a similar experience, while President Roosevelt has doubles all over the country. During the first national progressive convention at Chicago, a Massachusetts delegate started even Roosevelt's friends by his resemblance to Roosevelt. The delegate dressed the part, even to the Roosevelt sombrero and eyeglasses. He also has Rooseveltian teeth, and on his frequent trips to Boston always blocks traffic along Washington street.
