Umpires and Managers Agreeing on Rules for Second Game

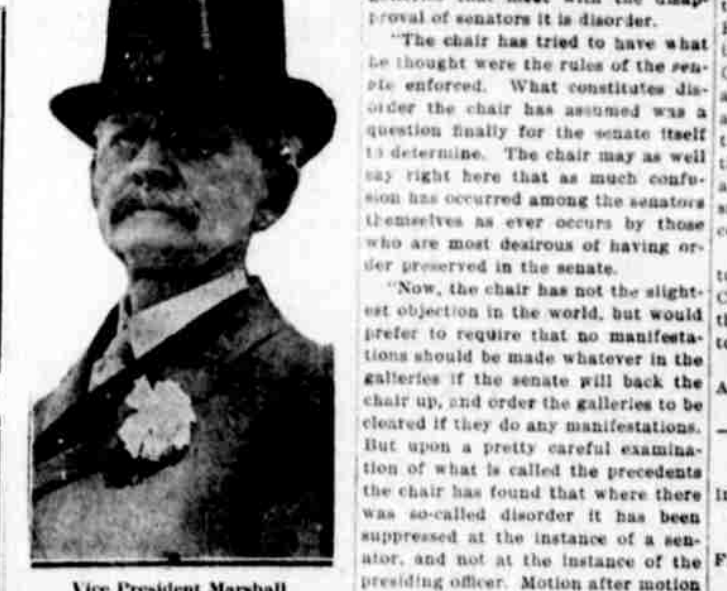

Just before umpire Connolly called "play ball" in the second game of the world's series in Philadelphia last week, the four umpires, Connolly and Lewis, representing the American League, the one behind the bat and the other on the right field foul line, and Rigler and Klem, of the National League, one on the bases and the other on the left field foul line, held a conference with Manager McFraw of the Giants and Danny Murphy, captain of the Athletics. They had the ground rules for the game. The crowd waited anxiously in the grand stand for the beginning of the game.

construes the rules with horse sense instead of with a microscope, and how "hair-splitting" frequently sidetracks public business in the upper house occurred during a recent night session. A senator had complained to Marshall that he did not enforce the senate rule which forbids applause in the galleries. The vice president retorted frankly that he did know of any such rule. Some time later Senator Bacon arose, his sense of precedents horrified by this statement of the vice president. He opined that "precedents are very serious things," and he trusted that the presiding officer would revise his statement about there being no such rule. The vice president beamed down from his rustrum, and then rising to his full height of five feet five, remarked: "The chair thinks that request demands that the chair say something. The chair proposes to say that the chair has no predilection upon the subject whatever. Since the chair has presided over this body the chair has observed that when there are manifestations of approval in the galleries that meet with the pleasure of the senators it would not be disorder, but if there are manifestations in the galleries that meet with the disapproval of senators it is disorder. The chair has tried to have what he thought were the rules of the senate enforced. What constitutes disorder the chair has assumed was a question finally for the senate itself to determine. The chair may as well say right here that as much confusion has occurred among the senators themselves as ever occurs by those who are most desirous of having order preserved in the senate. Now, the chair has not the slightest objection in the world, but would prefer to require that no manifestations should be made whatever in the galleries if the senate will back the chair up, and order the galleries to be cleared if they do any manifestations. But upon a pretty careful examination of what is called the precedents the chair has found that where there was so-called disorder it has been suppressed at the instance of a senator, and not at the instance of the presiding officer. Motion after motion has been made by senators to require the galleries to be cleared."

Success of Welfare Work Is Fully Shown

By BURTON K. STANDISH (Written for the United Press) WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 15.—Welfare work has not kept down the level of wages in the industrial plants where it has been introduced, according to a bureau of labor report just issued by Dr. Elizabeth Lewis Otey. It has, however, acted as a brake against strikes and other expressions of discontent on the part of the employees. It has greatly strengthened the influence of the factory manager over the factory hands. It appeals to the underpaid and illiterate class of workers whose gratitude for the parks, resting rooms, dining rooms, baths or other special considerations is shown in loyalty to the employer. Dr. Otey defends the welfare system as "setting a higher standard of comfort for the average employe, to which all industrial plants will gradually be brought, by pressure of public opinion or by legislation."

other items are illustrated. In each instance the employe appear to have approved the scheme. "Along with the welfare work, however," remarks Dr. Otey, "the employer might show a further recognition of his obligations to society by trying to crystallize the higher standards in his own mill or factory through legal enactment, and not by opposing the passage of laws which tend to secure these benefits for all workmen."

Dr. Otey defends the welfare system as "setting a higher standard of comfort for the average employe, to which all industrial plants will gradually be brought, by pressure of public opinion or by legislation." She reasons that since welfare work has proven "good business" for some of those employers who have tried it, the public has a right to demand that all employers adopt its essential standards. The report deals with fifty of the largest plants in which welfare work has been organized. These include various metal, textile and food factories, stores, hotels and public utilities. Mutual benefit societies, pension funds, libraries, outing clubs, savings banks, medical service and
