SCHOOL EXPENSE BUDGET

this amount, $10,214 was for school houses, and the remainder for maintenance. To cover this expense there was received from the general county tax $39,568, and $44,784 from special district taxes. The remainder from the state funds, etc.

If the maintenance of schools for the school year of 1914-1915 costs about the same as for the past year, it will be necessary to raise about $75,000. (We have no figures available for arriving at the cost of schools for this present year. Reports arrive in June, 1914.)

The special taxes levied for maintaining schools for the school year of 1912-1914 amounted to $52,928. The special taxes the next year of 1914-1915 amounts to only $15,041. A large portion of this $15,000 is levied to take up warrant debts incurred in the past.

When the tax payer is inclined to blame those responsible for a somewhat higher general school levy he should also have in mind that he will this year pay little or no special school taxes. And, after all, a mill of general school tax is no greater burden than a mill of special.

I wish to say in this connection, that placing the cost of the county schools on the county, as a whole, means much for the betterment of our public schools.

Following is a tabulation of maintenance taxes levied by the various districts of Klamath county, in addition to the general county tax. This does not include bond tax:

Table showing maintenance taxes levied by various districts of Klamath county for the last year and this year.

when the life and compositions of Chaminate will be considered.

Mr. and Mrs. George T. Baldwin, Mr. and Mrs. Harry G. Benson, Mr. and Mrs. Clarence H. Underwood and Miss Maude Baldwin were the dinner guests of Mr. and Mrs. Will Baldwin on Christmas Day.

Christmas day was the occasion for a reunion of the family of Mr. and Mrs. G. W. White, and with the exception of Kirk White, who is in his senior year at a law school in Los Angeles, and Dr. F. M. White, who was temporarily absent from the city was at dinner time, all the descendants were present at the bounteous dinner, and the afternoon was spent in a highly enjoyable manner.

One of the pleasant events of the Christmas season was a dinner given by Mr. and Mrs. R. R. Brewbaker at their home on Christmas Day, when they had for their guests Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Low, Mr. and Mrs. W. P. McMillan, Miss Greta McMillan, Mr. and Mrs. Glen Johnson, Floyd McMillan and William McMillan Jr.

Mrs. Karl G. Cummings entertained formally this afternoon at bridge, there being two tables and a light luncheon was served. The guests were Mrs. Thomas Hampton, Mrs. E. H. Hall, Mrs. Louis Bath, Mrs. Fred Mills, Mrs. Leslie Rogers, Miss Maude Baldwin and Mrs. Charles A. Spinning

Mrs. Fred Meihase is entertaining two tables of bridge this afternoon at her home on Fifth street. Her guests are Mrs. C. C. Hogue, Mrs. Fred Schallack, Mrs. Orb Campbell, Mrs. Earl Whitlock, Mrs. C. I. Robertson, Mrs. Bert E. Withrow, Mrs. L. F. Willets.

Invitations have been issued by the Kasliga Club for a dancing party.

which will be given Friday evening, January 2d, at the Baldwin hotel.

This club of young people has given a number of dances this season, which have proven highly enjoyable. Monday evening the club gave a masquerade ball at the Baldwin, and the varied costumes, some beautiful, some grotesque, made a most unique picture, with all ages and races represented by maskers.

OUR WEEKLY SERMON

"The Chance of a Man"

By E. C. RICHARDS, Pastor Grace Methodist Episcopal Church

Text, Matt. 19:16-22; Mark, 10:17-22; Luke, 18:18-23.

So important is this scene that three of the four Gospels record it.

Two young men stand fast to face. They are talking about one thing, eternal life. They are miles above the common Jew in thought. One of these men is poor, with no place to lay his head. The other is rich. The poor man is the teacher. The rich man is the inquirer.

The poor man is richer than the rich, and the rich man knows it. Both live in the high realms of thought. Both believe in eternal life, but one is earth bound, the other heaven bound.

The young man who was the learner stood at what might have been a new dawn. He stood at the new year of life, and wanting it, refused to take it. The earth clay held him fast. He looked out into the new a prisoner, and went back into the old sorrowing. He is lost to view in the world. Just this glimpse and he is gone. And the strange thing is that all the world thinks that he had in him the elements of greatness, and he had. He lacked decision. Wanting the highest, he refused to be freed from the lowest.

Great was this man's opportunity. He stood face to face with the Master of Men. And the Master of Men loved him. He admired his teacher. There was fascination in his presence. There was fascination in his words. He would be like him. Yet he would not. Other men, weaker in brain, weaker in education, weaker in culture, yielded, and became like the Master of Men. But this man's light went out. He comes on the scene light a bright, luminous star, and vanishes, and when the Master of Men gathers up his own, he is not reckoned with them. He might have been.

As we come to the new year, like young man in the scene before us, we face the Master of Men. We want eternal life. We want freedom from the enslavement of habit. We want new lease on life. We want cleaner consciences. We want some memories blotted out. We want the earth grip removed and the heaven grip established. Memories of innocence, memories of tender loves, memories of day dreams, memories of faces long since forgotten, memories of tender kisses, pure and true, memories of child-lit prayers, head pillowed on mother's dress, memories of a song at bed time, memories of bright day breaks and a new day of song, laughter, tears and play—all these come trooping up from the past and flood our souls, as the new year draws nigh. Somehow there's a break in the road; there's a bridge to be crossed; there's a stile to climb. The mighty teacher stands just beyond. He holds new life. We look into the face of the Master of the World.

Would we be reckoned in his company? We may be. Would we be heaven bound? We may be. Was the young man afraid of the cross? Yes. Not the cross of wood, but the cross of self surrender. Are we afraid of a cross? Are we afraid of the cross of a career of might? Are we afraid of the cross of true character? We face a man—plus. He challenges us. He challenges us mightily. He dares us to do. He dares us to be men. Do we flinch? Are we afraid of the new year? We face more than the Master of Men. We face our new selves. Are we afraid of our new selves, those selves which we may be? Shall we cross the bridge or turn back into oblivion?

The young man told of in the story forgot one thing, and it was fatal to him. We must not forget it. He forgot that the man he faced had power to pour himself into the life of the learner, the suppliant, to make him enter the person of his new self and there abide.

He forgot that the teacher not only knew truth, but also had power. Oh, man. Peter was a weak-backed fool, but he became mighty. John was a silly sentimentalist, but he became a majestic prophet. James was a selfish earth grabber, but he became a martyr. Paul was a blind bigot, but he became a saint. But the young man, nameless and alone, brilliant and rich, went back because he forgot that the Man of Truth was also a man of power.

The new year comes on apace. It tinges the eastern sky. It bursts in glory on us now. We must not go back.

Coming! Coming! Carload of Fords coming. Better speak for one now. GEORGE BIEHN.

It has been calculated that nearly 200,000,000 feet or more than 52,000 miles, of film are used yearly to satisfy the world's demand for moving pictures.

One thing about the oyster, the woman purchasers do not have to pinch them to see whether they are ripe. The same thing may be said of sourknot and limburger cheese. Once in a while an heiress marries her father's coachman or chauffeur, but she generally gets a divorce before the astonished hubby has a chance to clip any of her coupons.
