Healthy Hogs vs. Blooded Ones

Farm Expert Warns Against Cholera

Prof. Shaw Says Introduction of Hogs into the Northwest Must Be Watched Closely

BY PROF. THOMAS SHAW

In the Northwestern states the ranchmen are giving much attention to the introduction of swine. This is true of all the Northwestern states, particularly the Western Dakotas, Montana, Washington and Oregon.

This move is certainly a step in the right direction. Pork at $8.00 per hundred live weight is certainly better than wheat at 70 cents per bushel.

But there is a right and wrong way of going into pork raising. Persons who are not familiar with the business are pretty certain to take the wrong way. At least they are quite as apt to take the wrong methods as the method that is judicious and right.

What is meant by the wrong method? It means, first, that farmers are generally of the opinion that they must purchase high bred sows or sows that are purely bred, and it means, second, that foundation stocks may be brought in that will bring hog cholera with them. The lack of information on these two points is going to cost the ranchmen dearly in all the Northwestern states.

When choosing foundation sows, it is not essential that they shall be purely bred or even highly graded, unless the ranchman is going to produce pure bred swine for breeding. It does not matter how mixed the breeding. But it does matter that the sows shall have good conformation.

Good conformation means a long body and enough length of limb to make the sows active as graziers during the season of grazing. It does not matter what the blood components are, providing the conformation is as stated above. Mixed blood elements are advantageous, rather than prejudicial, for the reason that the more mixed the blood elements on the side of the dam, the more rapid will be the improvement when such dams are mated with pure bred sires of any breed. This is a lesson that it is to be feared not many ranchmen have learned and it is a lesson which they are slow to learn.

The idea is almost universal that the breeder must begin with high grade sows. As a rule he will succeed later with low grade sows, because of the less cost. But he must give attention to the selection of long bodied sows. This will insure the production of relatively large litters and of good bacon production in the progeny.

It should be remembered that with sows of mixed breeding improvement comes chiefly from the sire if purely bred. The more mixed the breeding of the dam, the more surely will the progeny resemble the sire.

As markets are at the present time, it will not matter much what breed the sire comes from, but it is pretty certain that the markets of the future will give the preference to a sire of the bacon breeds, as the Yorkshires or the Tanworth.

It is peculiarly unfortunate that hog cholera should be brought into the Northwestern states. It might have been kept out of these. It was not there originally, but it has been brought there.

Hog cholera is already in the Judith Basin. It is also in other portions of the Northwest. It is there because it has been brought there. There was no necessity for bringing it. Due precaution would have kept it out, but evidently due precaution was not exercised or it would not have been introduced.

It will not avail to say that the climate of those states is so pure that it will not nurse hog cholera. It is no more pure than the climate of
