Uncle Sam to Fish for Farmers

Finny Tribe to Be Used for Fertilizer

The Dog Fish, Enemy to All Other Kinds, Will Be Particularly Sought Out to Increase Land Productiveness

United Press Service
WASHINGTON, Feb. 16. — The ocean depths are the latest regions to be explored by the bureau of soils of the department of agriculture in its continent-wide invoice of the nation's assets in fertilizer materials. Just now it is engaged in a hunt for nitrogenous products, which with phosphorous and potassium for the triumvirate of desirable fertilizers, and it is estimated that literally billions of fish might be caught and converted into the richest fertilizing material without appreciably decreasing the supply.

Even the American Indians knew something about the value of fish as fertilizers and were wont to put one or two in each hill of corn at the time of planting. The first factory for cooking fish by steam for fertilizing purposes was erected near Portsmouth in 1841 and from that time until 1884 the industry grew.

Since then, however, it has suffered something of a decline and the bureau of soils hopes to avert threatened depletion of the soil.

No region or section has been overlooked by this bureau in its hunt for the three elements named, for their presence is deemed of more value to the nation at large than all the gold veins of California or the unmined silver of Nevada.

The deserts of the great Southwest have been scoured for potassium salts, the kelp groves of the Pacific Coast as far north as Alaska have been experimented with to the same end, great peat beds in Florida are now being examined, and phosphate fields have been discovered in South Carolina, Tennessee, Kentucky, Arkansas, Utah and Idaho.

None of these, however, give more promise of development than do the innumerable fish that may be secured by the boatload in the Atlantic every summer.

Acting under the direction of Milton Whitney, chief of the bureau of soils, J. W. Turrentine has just completed an investigation of the possibilities of fish fertilizers, the most common fish used for this purpose being the menhaden, variously known as the "porgy," "hard head," "bug fish," and other colloquial names. It is seldom used for food.

Although as many as 900,000,000 menhaden have been caught and converted into fertilizer in one year, the number becomes almost insignificant when compared with the number of these fish destroyed by their natural enemies, principally the dog fish and the blue fish. One authority estimates this number at three thousand millions.

"Perhaps the most probable extension of the fish scrap industry through which the employment of fish other than the menhaden for that purpose will prove to be the utilization of the dog fish," said Mr. Turrentine in his report.

"This supposition is based on the general hatred for the dog fish entertained by the fishermen and the consensus of opinion that their destruction is imperative. It is estimated that the annual loss from destruction by dog fish of food fish and fishing gear in the state of Massachusetts alone amounts to $400,000.

The Canadian government has already sought to combine a war on the dog fish with an increase in fertilizer material by establishing three plants in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick for the purpose of converting the dog fish into fish-scrap.

Near Pensacola, Florida, a plant has recently been erected to utilize the waste due to preparing fish for food. With the establishment of other such plants, it is thought that millions of mullet, which cannot be disposed of for food, might be made available for the fruit and truck growers.

BOB-TAILED NAG EATS LESS FEED

THIS, AT ANY RATE, IS THE OPINION OF A PASTURE OWNER IN FRANCE, AND HE CHARGES ACCORDINGLY

United Press Service
PARIS, Feb. 16. — "Horses with docked tails may graze here for 10 cents a day; with long tails, 20 cents a day." Asked for an explanation of this curious sign displayed at the gateway of his meadow near Dieppe, the owner replied: "It is very simple. A docked horse, irritated by flies, is constantly interrupting his grazing to drive them off by swinging his head. The long-tailed horse, however, having full use of his tail for the purpose for which it was designed is able to graze continuously; so he eats about twice as much as the other."
