

Intimate Study of General Villa Explains Rule Over Force

A CLOSE RANGE VIEW OF THE REBEL LEADER, BY A UNITED PRESS STAFF CORRESPONDENT WHO IS IN THE FIELD WITH THE REVOLUTIONARY TROOPS

CHIHUAHUA, Mexico, March 29.—Noontime of a cold raw day, in the mountains; a score of Mexicans sitting around a campfire, their guns and cartridge belts beside them; an American miner rides up to the fire. "Welcome, señor," says the captain. The Mexicans feed the newcomer.

The time comes for him to go. He starts off over the mesa on his horse, after hearty goodbyes.

"Wait, señor, one minute," shouts the captain. The American obeys. The captain comes running up to him.

"When you go to Chihuahua don't tell Villa that you saw us sitting around the campfire at noontime. You see, he sent us out to find the bandit Castillo. He would not like to know that we were resting at noontime. We were only talking over what we had better do to find that diablo Castillo. But don't tell Villa, huh?"

This is only one of the hundred incidents that shows the tremendous power that Villa exerts over his soldiers. All of Villa's soldiers are volunteers. While Huerta, in the Mexican capital, is seeking farmer boys in the market places and dragging fathers from their families at midnight to get soldiers, Villa is getting them in this fashion:

"We wish to join your army," say two Mexicans, approaching the rebel leader. "Did you ever fight before?" snaps Villa, half closing his dull, gun-metal colored eyes. "No, señor." "Why do you wish to join?" "For our country," answered the peons. "Well, I'll take you," says Villa. And then he snaps out: "But if I ever see you run or quit fighting I'll kill you myself. Understand?" "Si, señor," declare the delighted peons.

Villa's looting in a store in Manaco was the height of orderly pillage. He had given orders that any man who looted would be shot, and five men were killed that day. But he learned that a Spaniard, owner of the largest store in town, had been working against the rebels.

The next day Villa himself went to the store and took possession. Squads of twenty men were permitted to enter the store at a time.

"Hand down those hats," said Villa, pointing to a supply of broad-brim Stetsons. The clerk brought down a hundred or more hats.

"Come here, Jose," said Villa to a soldier. "Take off your hat." Then Villa slammed a new Stetson onto the head of the happy soldier and twisted it about critically. "Doesn't fit you, huh? Here, try this one," slamming on another sized hat.

All day long and all the next day Villa himself worked fitting coats, trousers, shoes, shirts and all the things his men needed.

"This isn't looting," he explained. "It's confiscation of warfare."

There was another side to it. Villa met half a dozen of his men later, all dressed up.

"Got everything you want?" Villa asked them. "Got shoes, clothes, money, hats, guns, ammunition—everything you want?"

"Si, señor," we are very happy and content.

"Very well, then," snapped Villa.

with a dreadful look on his face and with an oath. "Now I've taken care of you, but if you don't take care of me when it comes time to fight I'll kill you with my own gun."

"Why don't you quit?" a friend asked Villa, one time early in the game, at Jaurez, when things looked dark for his side.

Villa pointed across the Rio Grande to El Paso.

"When I see El Paso, with its fine buildings and its clean homes and its clean, well clothed, gentle children and women, and then look at Jaurez, with its dirty houses, its muddy streets, its rotten schools and its poor ragged children and women, it makes me mad. Our women and children have as good a right to fine things as the women and children of the United States have, and it's the fault of the Mexican men that they haven't got them. We've let a few people get everything, and we've got to get it back again."

There's one American, somewhere in the Southwest country that Villa would like to find.

"I was stranded once," says Villa.

A Farmer Told Us

That he could buy FORMALDEHYDE for a dollar less, per gallon, than we charged. Investigation proved that the product he referred to had been diluted with water and was only HALF STRENGTH. So in reality he was paying a dollar MORE per gallon than our figure.

Besides—if he used the weak Formaldehyde—he was taking a chance of a field of ruined wheat.

Our FORMALDEHYDE is full 40 per cent in strength, and the price is a dollar per quart, $3.00 per gallon.

It is a good plan to buy your drugs at a dependable store.

Income on Homesteads

E. B. Marvin and Spurr E. Hoefel, of Arrow, Ore., have been very successful the past winter in trapping Central Oregon furs. The gentlemen have their cabins decorated with 89 coyotes, 31 badgers, 11 wildcats, besides several cats of the striped variety; and, in the meantime, while trapping these varmints, they have also complied with the land laws on their homesteads. This shows what a homesteader can do if he will only use a little ambition.—Silver Lake Leader.

Timber Sale

The John S. Owen company of Eau Claire, Wis., has purchased from Ernest E. Hart, Incorporated, and the Ernest E. Hart estate of Council Bluffs, Iowa, 5,540 acres of timber land in the Butte Falls district, for $200,000.—Medford Mail-Tribune.

The Tip in Time

Although Wednesday night was the coldest of the year, the thermometer dropping to 24, and in spots to 23, little damage was done to fruit, as the cold wave found most of the orchardists fully prepared and orchard beating was universally resorted to on an extensive basis. It is estimated that over $5,000 worth of crude oil distillate was burned in saving the million dollar pear crop, and a dense pall of smoke hung all day over the entire Rogue River Valley.—Medford Mail-Tribune.

A Dairy Crew

There arrived by Monday's train eight or ten young Swiss dairy men bound for Surprise Valley. They will be employed on the ranches as dairymen, and as they understand their business, renders the success of the dairy at Cedarville an assured fact.—Alturas Plaindealer.

New Church

Work was started this week in breaking ground for the basement of the Presbyterian church building, to be erected on the lot recently purchased for that purpose by the church on Dewey street.—Lake County Examiner.

Recall in Crook

The first steps in an effort to recall County Commissioners Bayley and Brown, Sheriff Elkins and Assessor Foster were started here last night. W. H. Lucy, whom the commissioners recently deposed as county sealer, is doing the work for Springer.—Bend Bulletin.

Gotta Clean Up

"Cleanup Day must be observed," says Chief of Police Porter. "Until Monday our appeal will be only a request. After that date it will be a demand, not to be passed over. We are determined to have a clean, stylish city if work and care can do it, and every citizen will be asked to help. If they do not see fit to heed the request, then they will be commanded to do so."—Ashland Tidings.

Bend's Ice Plant

Before leaving for the East last Friday, K. B. Miller of the Bend Water, Light and Power company, announced that his organization will build an ice plant here immediately. The building and machinery will cost about $12,000, and the capacity will be 14 tons daily.—Bend Bulletin.

They get results.—Herald Want Ads.

A BOOK OF INTEREST

More absorbing than a book of fiction is the tale the bank book tells when you're in need of cash to conduct life's affairs. Here you can deposit as little as you wish and get 4 per cent interest on it if you leave it here for a month, and have that interest compounded semi-
