Germany Leads in Potato Crop

Ireland and America Outdistanced

Department of Agriculture Finds That Kaiser's Country Is Afflicted With Less Diseases Also

United Press Service

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 1.—Wurrah! Wurrah! The glory of Erin has departed; the shamrock is wilted; the harp is mute. For the department of agriculture has just issued a bulletin, "Lessons for American Potato Growers from German Experience," and it gives twelve pages of facts and figures to show that the subjects of the kaiser know more about Irish potatoes than the men from the "Old Sod," who are credited with inventing them.

To begin with, Germany plants 8,000,000 acres in potatoes every year to this country's 3,500,000. And in the Vaterland they gather 262.5 bushels per acre to 96.2 bushels per acre here. Furthermore, when the consumer on this side of the Atlantic is paying 56 cents a bushel for them they are costing the Berliner only 30 cents a bushel.

"A prominent reason for the low average yield per acre in this country is that we have, as a rule, fewer plants on this side of the Atlantic," reads the bulletin. "Not only are wider rows and more space between hills the rule here, but various other avoidable causes result in a poor stand. The Germans plant more than twice as many seed potatoes per acre than is the custom here, or more than 24 bushels per acre."

When one travels through the country seeking the census of low yields they are not hard to find. "Imperfect preparation of the ground leaves a poor seed bed. The seed potatoes may be selected, more or less diseased, cut too small and carelessly planted. Many of our fields outside of the leading potato districts have only half the number of plants that would be found in a Scotch or German field."

American farmers also have more pests to contend with than do those abroad. The late blight is common to both continents, but the Colorado potato beetle and the potato flea beetle do not occur in Europe, nor is the scab of much importance there. The advantages of spraying with Bordeaux mixture to control the late blight have been demonstrated annually for ten years by the New York Agricultural Experiment Station at Geneva, yet last year millions of bushels of New York potatoes decayed because the farmer failed to spray or did not spray thoroughly.

The problem of supplying a disease-free seed has been met and solved in Germany, and the recommendation is made that the same thing is done in this country through the co-operation of the potato growers' associations and the department of agriculture, rather than by legal enactment. In previous years of scarcity the United States has imported potatoes from Europe in large quantities—4,000,000 bushels in 1908 and 12,000,000 in 1911. With them came diseases hitherto unknown in America, like the blacking and scurf and powdery scab, and the danger of importing the still more dreaded wart disease led the secretary of agriculture to prohibit the importation of potatoes from most of the large growing districts abroad. Hereafter, experts say, enough potatoes must be produced to supply all our needs, as most sources of foreign imports have been closed by quarantine, and unless production is increased and maintained a serious condition may arise.

The "Old Oaken Bucket" has been relegated to the ash heap by the department of agriculture, which, on investigation, has found that its moss-covered sides are full of microbes and the iron hoops are anything but sanitary. Of 411 shallow farm wells examined in Indiana the waters of 399 were very bad, 43 were doubtful, and only 159 received clean bills of health. In Minnesota 79 wells were examined, and 59 were found to be polluted. Deep wells are not exempt from suspicion, for out of 177 of such the waters of 45 were found to be bad and 16 were doubtful. Even the bubbling spring, the last stronghold of the rural pest, the insidious germ has been found germinating, and such sources of supply should be carefully watched.

"Twenty-five of the polluted wells in Minnesota were bad only because of poor surface protection, and could easily have been made safe," says a bulletin of the department, which outlines a simple sanitary system for the farm home. Practically all of the surface supplies were polluted. During these investigations 23 of the farms examined showed a record of typhoid fever. Surface water supplies should not be used for household purposes or for washing milk cans. They should not even be used for laundry purposes unless no other supply is available. Rain water from the roof is often polluted by dust and decayed leaves and other foreign matter. The underground cistern should be of water tight construction, to prevent pollution from the neighboring soil. There should also be suitable provision for straining or filtering the water previous to its entrance to the cistern.

When the farmer figures on his water supply the amount needed is a vital item, and to help him on this point the department has prepared a table on water consumption.

Each member of the family needs from 25 to 40 gallons per day, probably depending on their individual tastes in bathing, though the bulletin is silent on this point. Each horse requires 12 gallons per day. A cow needs 10 gallons, a hog 2½ gallons and a sheep 2 gallons.

For the family of six a 200 gallon supply should be sufficient if the water is used for the house only. On a farm where water is supplied to a family of six persons, 10 horses, 12 cows, 25 hogs and 15 sheep the daily storage supply should be at least 500, in addition to whatever supply the farmer deems necessary for fire protection.
