

Society

Notice and items for the Social Department will receive attention if left at The Herald office or telephoned to Main 66 by Friday afternoon or before 10 o'clock Saturday morning.

In most towns, the society column of the paper usually consists of a conglomeration of teas, what parties, at homes and club meeting notices, with a bunch of names labelled "those present" hooked on each as a trailer. In these, royal auction, what, five hundred and kindred games are all that are mentioned—such games as pinochle, polo and the other games the now socially "high-and-mighty" used to play before the farm was sold, are distinctly under the ban, so much so, that these latter names are used as mild curse words, or as terms to show one's intimacy with settlement work.

Now the Herald doesn't want to lay any claim to superiority in the chronicling of social events, but right here let it be recorded that there is no bar against any form of game being mentioned in this column. This week, it is our humble intention to feature faro, stud poker, twenty-one, three card monte, craps, chuck-a-luck, fan-tan, roulette, Klondyke and other games that were favorites in the younger days of the West, before many of us sold our pistols, hung our chaps in the woodshed, acquired the white collar habit and settled down to the duties of being a prominent citizen. If we did not speak of these old time diversions we would be overlooking the biggest events of the season, the men's and women's stag parties, given last night by the Elks.

The men's stag, which was given at the opera house, was a "Western Night," and never before was there such an aggregation of cowpunchers, sheepherders, Indians, bad men, toughs, gamblers, miners and other characters assembled under one roof. The room was transformed into a gambling and dance hall, and the games were entered into with a wild abandon. Every turn of the wheel, flip of the cards or throw of the bones causing an exchange of thousands of dollars. The ceiling was the limit, and John Houston saw to it that the sky lights were all removed. Harry Borel, John Hubbard, Francis Olds and Arch Wishard, arrayed in feminine finery and perfectly made up, formed a ladies' orchestra, which furnished music for the dancing. Other girls were J. J. Parker, Harry Benson, A. F. Balfour, E. H. Henry and Karl Whitlock. It was a joyous, riotous crowd that blew its money, and either stole or bought more, and there were sixty laughs to every minute, as each stunt was pulled off. John Houston, in feminine apparel, placarded his layout as the "only honest game," but those who lost their money as he threw five dices with the dice every time thought otherwise. Charles F. Stone, with oily manners, lurid neckwear and a scintillating scarpin, was the sleek, crooked gambler of the yellowbacks. The old days were forcibly brought to mind by J. Frank Adams, for he wore a uniform that he wore over forty years ago, while a member of a militia company at Sacramento. John Foster, who presided over the fan-tan layout, certainly had "the smile that is childlike and bland," and the "ways that are dark and tricks that are vain," for which Bret Harte claims "the heathen Chinese is peculiar." George Chastain's makeup as "Timothy Hay of Yaptown" was the cause of much merriment, and Lawrence Kinner also shone as an inquisitive ruralite. To attempt to describe all that were present, or to enumerate one quarter of the characters would take more space than has been used by all the papers in writing of Mexico, but they were all there, booted and chapped, bristling with guns, and disguised with fierce moustaches. Even the railroad builder, so important a character in the West, was represented in reality by Gust Peterson. Three tousing cheers were given as W. A. Deikel went on the stage, attired as Uncle Sam. He led the crowd in singing "America." At 11 o'clock Charles J. Ferguson gave the toast to the "absent brothers," and this was followed by lusty cheers for the Elks and for the visitors.

While the Elks and friends were enjoying an evening of gaming and riot at the opera house, their wives and ladies were having an equally good time at Elks' hall. Many were attired as men, and many represented various characters, and merriment reigned all evening. A wedding with "rev." M. A. Jackson as parson, Mrs. E. H. Hall as the bride and Mrs. F. B. English as groom, created much merriment. Dancing was enjoyed, and refreshments were served. Toward midnight, the men who were at the Opera house, joined the women in the adjoining, which obtained until a late hour.

Arrangements have been completed by the choir of the Church of the Sacred Heart for a dance at the White Pelican hotel Monday night. Tindall's orchestra will render the music, and the members of the choir will be in charge of the floor. All of the organization are well and favorably known in Klamath's social circles, and the affair bids fair to be a big success, both socially and financially.

"The Docena" is the name of the latest social organization for Klamath Falls, which came into being at a meeting at the home of Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Hogue Monday night. The club is composed of young ladies, and the object is improvement along literary lines, as well as amusement. Meetings are to be held fortnightly, on Friday evenings. Following are the officers elected:

President—Hortense Hogue.
Vice President—Mary Hughes.
Secretary—Octavia DeLap.

The members of the club are Jennie Johnston, Anna May Johnston, Pearl Dow, Ruth Ball, Mary Ball, Octavia DeLap, Hortense Hogue, Marie Griffith, Faye West, Ethel Stubbs, Mary Hughes and Katherine McAndrews. The first regular meeting of the Docena was held last night at the Hogue home, when an excellent program was rendered. This was in charge of Jennie Johnston, Pearl Dow, Ruth Ball and Katherine McAndrews. Southern songs and readings composed the program, which was followed by games and light refreshments. Miss Griffith will entertain at the next meeting of the organization.

The dance in the West hall of the Odd Fellows' Temple tonight promises to be one of the most enjoyable of the season.
