Militant Suffragette Is a Big Worry to English Lawmakers

J. Bull Is Kept Awake Nights Puzzling Over This Radical New Trouble of His--Stern Measures Are Said to Be Imperative

By ED L. KEEN
(London Correspondent of the United Press)

LONDON, May 5.—John Bull is fast acquiring chronic insomnia, trying to guess the answer to the question, "What shall we do with the wild women?" No desperate has he become over the absolute mockery of the law by the "militants" that he is almost—but not quite—persuaded to accept the suggestion now seriously advanced by some eminent men, and certainly endorsed by a large section of the public, "Let them die."

The failure of the "cat and mouse" act as a cure for militancy has been so thoroughly demonstrated that even Home Secretary McKenna, the author, has at last begun to realize that stern measures will have to be adopted. He is not at any loss for advice. Great Britain is notoriously an epistolary nation, and the office of "Chief of Police of the Empire" is nowadays the favorite target of the every-ready letter writers. The suggestions, which are being received by the hundreds daily, prescribe punishments varying from tattooing on the chin to deportation for life.

The recent statistics of window-smashing, arson, dynamiting, etc., by no means indicate how sorely John Bull has been hurt in the tenderest part of his anatomy—his pocketbook. The women have destroyed more than $5,000,000 worth of property since they began their crusade of militancy five years ago. This represents only a fraction of the indirect loss in money. Merchants and hotel keepers are complaining bitterly of the falling off of their tourist trade, especially from America. Mary Richardson could not select a more opportune time, for the suffragette standpoint, for her meat-axe assault upon the Rokeby Venus in the national gallery. The consequent closing of practically all the famous show places of London—the galleries, museums and palaces—coming just at the season of the year when folks in the United States were planning their summer European trips, has, according to the tourists agencies, been responsible for thousands either cutting England entirely from their itineraries or curtailing their expected visits to this country to the minimum. Judging from advance bookings from the other side, London will be little more than a way-station en route to Paris and other continental points for probably nine-tenths of the Europe-bound passenger traffic this season.

A number of prominent members of parliament are urging as a solution Lord Robert Cecil's plan to exile convicted militants to St. Helena or to some British island nearer to England. "Deportation seems to be the only thing left," for instance, says W. Ormsby-Gore, himself an ardent supporter of woman suffrage. "It would doubtless be an expensive and possibly a dangerous precedent, but I consider it absolutely necessary that militancy must be stopped, not only to prevent the laws being brought into complete contempt, but to advance the cause of woman suffrage."

An interesting feature of the present anti-suffragette agitation is the attitude of the doctors. The fact that three distinguished members of the profession, medical officers in his majesty's prisons, have been publicly horsewhipped by suffragettes because under directions from the home secretary they have been compelled to administer forcible feeding, has had its influence. The profession generally objects, not only to the assumption of this sort of risks, but to the other responsibilities that have been added to the already uncongenial duties of the prison doctors by reason of the "cat and mouse" act. As stated by Sir Victor Horsely, one of London's most eminent surgeons, to the Medical-Legal Society, "The prison doctor has become a common executioner, a judge of the criminal court, a partial dispenser of unequal punishments, and lastly and only occasionally, a medical practitioner of the ordinary type."

Among those who have been trying to convince McKenna that he has made a grievous error in turning hunger-striking militants loose for fear of their dying on his hands is Dr. Charles A. Mercier, leading criminologist and expert in mental diseases. "I believe the general verdict would be 'served her right,'" he says. "This systematic and successful defiance of the law is a menace to the life of the nation. If it were to become general, and it is certainly spreading, society would break up, lawlessness would lead to anarchy, and anarchy would end in barbarism. The value of society as a whole preponderates vastly over the value of any of its component individuals."

But is the authorities cannot be brought to see the advisability of adopting the "let them die" policy, Dr. Mercier has a novel alternative suggestion which has met with much favor. "These women," he says, "are prompt to invoke the protection and benefits of that very law that they seek to destroy. They should be proclaimed outlaws; their contracts should not be enforceable; they should be made incapable of taking legal proceedings of any kind, civil or criminal."

As part of the million dollar endowment which Barnard is attempting to raise before its twenty-fifth anniversary, Mrs. E. H. Harriman has given $50,000.
