

Fort Gets Outside Players for Sunday

When Walter Dixon brings down his re-organized bunch of ball players Sunday to play the Klamath Falls boys, many new faces will be seen in the line-up. Not exactly new faces, but new for this season.

Walter has strengthened his team with the hope and expectation of taking down the prize money offered the winning team at the baseball carnival during the big celebration at Fort Klamath. Also, he has an overwhelming desire to take the measure of the Klamath Falls team in Sunday's game.

To this end Walter has secured three Weed players, Matthews of Roseburg, Wade Crawford and Joe Ball of the reservation, and in addition to these will have the pick of the material that is always to be found around Fort Klamath.

The names of the players from Weed have not been learned, but it is understood two of them are infielders. However, the local players are not disturbed, and are only in hopes that Walter brings down a few players from the Coast League.

With the added strength Fort Klamath ought to give the locals a close rub, putting up a contest that will renew interest in baseball in this section of the country.

First Photograph of Ocean Steamer Passing Through Panama Canal Locks

The first ocean steamer to pass through the locks of the Panama canal was the Alliance, which made the trip June 8. Photographs have just come to the United States. She left Cristobal at 6 o'clock on the morning of June 8 and steamed slowly through the sea level entrance of the canal to Gatun locks. There she was tied up by the north guide wall until hawsers were fastened to her in preparation for the tow through the locks. At 7 o'clock the ascent was begun. The tonnage of the Alliance, about 4,000 gross, is so small that the work of locking her up through the three flights or chambers was much the same as that of locking the numerous tugs and dredges that had already made the ascent. The ascent from sea level to the level of Gatun Lake, eighty-five feet above the sea, was made in one hour and twenty minutes. The ship was turned to the lake and then started downward, the lockage from the lake to sea level taking about one hour and thirty minutes. The purpose of this experimental trip was to try out the electric towing machines before being used in the first trip of a ship through the canal. The machines worked perfectly. "There was not a hitch of any kind," said Colonel Geethals, "and yet the test should not be taken as indicative of the time that may be required to pass a ship through the locks, because the hawsers were all attached before the ascent was begun."

Sidelights From Mediation Circles

By FRED S. FERGUSON
(Staff Correspondent of the United Press)

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont., June 24.—The delicate Mexican situation and possible "international complications" have nipped a rising playwright in the bud. This is one of the tragedies of the mediation conferences. While the mediators have heard the arguments of the Mexican and American delegates in an effort to reach an agreement for the pacification of the southern republic, sons and daughters of the principals have turned toward every possible sort of amusement to pass the time. The son of Ambassador Naon, of Argentine, turned playwright—and then came the tragedy.

Romulo is 11 years old. His companion here is George Suarez, son of the Chilean minister. Having played tennis and pool and worn themselves out with other amusements, this youthful pair turned to the stage. After Romulo had completed his manuscript and the lines had been memorized, a dress rehearsal was held to which a favored few were invited. The first and last production was on the stage in the ball room of the hotel. As the plot unfolded newspaper men covering the mediation conference were brought forth in the story as bandits, bartenders or detectives. Romulo was a bandit—a musical bandit. He sang a song of his own composition, but the first scene of the play was enough to cause a censor in the person of Ambassador Naon to get on the job.

This marvelous production opened with what was designated as a drawing room scene. Romulo and George, in the characters they represented, sat sagely upon opposite sides of the stage and discussed the Mexican situation from start to finish. Ambassador Naon read this part of the manuscript, and promptly suppressed the production.

There are nearly a dozen men, old and young, in the United States, who are anxious to marry one of the fair daughters of Emilio Rabasa, one of the Mexican delegates to the mediation conference. There are four daughters, Isabel, Concepcion, Mercedes and Ruth. Their pictures have been published in papers throughout the country, and now they are receiving letters almost daily from love-lorn youths as far away as California.

Ruth is the youngest of the four sisters. She is 16, but at present conference were brought forth in the others. Concepcion, whose pet name in the family is Concha, and is the next youngest, is running Ruth a close second. One young man writing to Ruth, begged that he be given a picture. He said if there was any cost incident to having the picture taken, he would willingly forward the money. Ruth can understand English, but cannot speak it. Despite this handicap she is a favorite among the American friends the sisters have made while in Niagara. They are accomplished dancers, and there are few new steps which they have not mastered.

An informal dance is in progress at the hotel every night from about 9 until 10:30. The entire mediation colony on the Canadian side has fallen into the custom of the Mexicans in dining late. Breakfast is usually about 10 o'clock for a majority of the principals and their suites; luncheon at 2; tea at 4, and dinner at 8. During the day tennis, automobile rides and sight seeing trips take up the time of the Rabasa sisters and others not engaged in the work of peace. One of the easiest things imaginable is to get up an international tennis match on the courts near the hotel. Within a few minutes players may be rounded for doubles with Mexico and Argentine represented on one side of the net, and Brazil, the United States, France, Chili or Great Britain on the other. In addition to the nations represented by those connected with the mediation, there is a Frenchman, a Cuban and a Great Britain among the newspaper men.

Be Fair

A month or two ago considerable unfavorable comment was made concerning the so called "strength of the electricity" being delivered in the city of Klamath Falls.

The Council invested in a voltmeter and put it on the lighting circuit.

There has been a conspicuous absence of any report of the findings of this instrument.

We think it might be interesting to the customers of electricity to know what the Council found.

They found that the instrument has not shown a registration of less than 110 volts.

Do you know that the Rules and Regulations of the Railroad Commission allows a variation of 5 per cent below this figure?

Sponge Method

Try the following recipe prepared by Professor Joseph Becker, the world's greatest chef. Professor Becker made a careful test of CRATER LAKE Flour for us and we guarantee results if his directions for its use are followed:

One cake Fleischmann's yeast, 1 1/2 quarts lukewarm water, 2 tablespoonfuls lard or butter, 1 tablespoon salt, 4 1/2 quarts sifted Crater Lake flour, 2 tablespoonfuls sugar. Dissolve the yeast and sugar in one quart of the lukewarm water, and add to it 1 1/2 quarts of sifted Crater Lake flour, or sufficient to make an ordinary sponge. Beat well. Cover and set aside to rise for about 1 1/2 hours in a warm place. When well risen add to it the pint of lukewarm water, lard or butter, the remainder of the flour, or enough to make a moderately firm dough, and lastly, the salt. Knead thoroughly, place in greased bowl. Cover and let rise for from 1 1/2 to 2 hours. When light, mould into loaves and place in well greased baking pans, cover and let rise again for about an hour. When light, bake 40 to 50 minutes, reducing the heat of the oven after first 10 minutes. This recipe makes four large loaves. The whole process takes from 5 1/2 to 6 hours, and if followed closely, will produce excellent results.
