

Nearly a Half Million Boy Scouts Take Their Vacation

From Edgewater to San Diego, Tan Clad Youngsters From Various Cities Are Taking Their Vacations

United Press Service

NEW YORK, Aug. 6.—Along the river road that leads from Edgewater along the Palisades and back into Jersey treads a company of tan clad figures, tired and a bit hollow-eyed under the unusual strain of carrying much camp luggage, but very erect and soldierly of bearing for all that. Two weeks of camp life had tanned the city lads a bit, taken off a few pounds of flesh and substituted wiry muscle, and the proven scouts were homeward bound.

Eastport and San Diego the scene can be duplicated, or has been duplicated or will be duplicated during the summer weeks for there are nearly half a million Boy Scouts in the United States, and every mother's son of them is counting on a summer camping trip. Unconsciously and indirectly the minds of the half million are being directed and trained from a central office perched high up in a skyscraper on Broadway. The men who do the directing tell some remarkable stories of the work being done throughout the country. The scout movement is a big and real thing to the men who direct it from the New York office building, and to the lieutenants who in hundreds of cities guide the half million boys in their work and play. To the boys, if the word of the directors is to be taken, "outing" is real work. Therein lies the secret of the growth of the movement. The Boy Scouts are playing the game through to the finish.

In Michigan Boy Scouts are deputy fire wardens; in New Jersey they are deputy game wardens; in Boston recently they combed miles of country searching for a lost girl; in Washington they out-policed the police in helping to handle big crowds at a suffrage meeting, and in a dozen other cities they have become sanitary agents and have acted as first aids to reception committees when big conventions were held. The heroic performance of the scouts at last year's memorable gathering of the Blue and Gray at Gettysburg is still fresh. Wherever they are they are taught and trained in efficient play-work of some kind and the organizers declare the youngsters of the country take the idea so fast that the problem now is not how to interest boys and make the membership grow, but how to get men enough to look after the scout companies as they spring up and grow into regiments. They point to Michigan as an instance. There the boys are said to have saved more than a million dollars to the state by detecting and giving warning of forest fires. Each scout reports the smallest fire to his captain, the captain to the fire warden, and the fire wardens cope with the blaze before it becomes big and dangerous.

"One good deed every day"—or whatever the motto happens to be—is not half so tangible to the boys of Michigan as is fire prevention and the deputy fire warden's badge, which the boys wear as proudly as ever a policeman wore his star. The idea "takes." It has taken so well that Governor Hatfield of West Virginia recently called a boy scout director from New York to Charleston to learn how the same plan might be worked out in the timberlands of that state. To the average citizen who has seen a horde of uniformed youngsters pile on to a car in which he is office-bound, the "system" behind what appears to be boys' play is something of a surprise. There are a dozen different divisions in which scouts seek fame. Little ribbons or badges mean achievement—superiority. Through a magazine which has a regular corps of editors the general scout plans are spread from one end of the country to the other. Through special columns in many local papers the boys are spreading news of scout plans for given localities. There are also standardized hand-books or text books which show exactly what must be done and what must be known before a boy becomes a scout and a scout acquires merit. Along with these text books go tests and examinations that would stump Mr. Average Citizen. John Jones, boy scout, is instructed to find out first hand how his city is kept clean. The business man, riding to the office behind his newspaper, can't. Probably no one city official can. So he delves deeply. He interviews several. Then he goes out and has a look for himself. Then he gets a button or a badge signifying his degree. In his company he has gained what might be compared to a sanitary engineer's degree. Or if he lives in a smaller community in the country perhaps he becomes a naturalist of some kind. He may get his promotion through the ranks by knowing how his town or city is run. While running wild—to all appearances—and "playing" from morning to night, the individual, according to the claims of the boy scout directors, is becoming one of an army of half a million who will grow up to citizenship a force for health, conservation and good government.

And the training and work is all incidental, the half million boys are playing, merely playing—but playing hard and to an end. Housekeeping rooms, near bridge.

The women in the Sherborn, Mass. prison recently gave a performance of the Gilbert and Sullivan opera, "The Pirates of Penzance."
