

Four Minute Eclipse This A. M.

During That Time, Clocks Re-Checked

Following This Morning's Eclipse, Observatory Men Announce Another for February, 1916

United Press Service

WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 21.—Astronomers and star gazers in many parts of the world were up at sunrise today to observe the eclipse of the sun.

For just a few seconds after sunrise, observers in the United States north of Washington and as far west as Indianapolis were permitted just the slightest part of the moon's shadow on the sun. The map prepared by the naval observatory at Washington shows that the path of totality of the eclipse began up in the extreme north polar region of the Western hemisphere. It extends eastward to Norway, Sweden, Russia and Persia. In this some about 100 miles wide, the eclipse was visible in its totality for about four minutes.

Many government went to large expense to fit out expeditions to observe the eclipse in the some entirety, but the United States, feeling that the eclipse has no great scientific importance, and that it will be fully observed by the Swedish and Russian astronomers, made no such provision. It had been planned by private enterprise some time ago to send an expedition to observe the eclipse in Persia, but this was abandoned when it was learned that it would necessitate the invasion of extremely wild and remote country, inhabited by tribesmen who might make astronomers targets for spear hurling.

When it was considered that all of the observations must be made in four minutes, and that the slightest hitch or a cloud would spoil them, all thoughts of an expedition were forgotten. Many scientists who wished to observe the phenomenon despite the war, went to Riga and Kief, Russia, which were both directly in the path of the total eclipse.

"Beyond assisting in the astronomy of the moon's position from its observed contacts with the sun, the practical results of a solar eclipse have been so fully covered by previous expeditions that no important new results are anticipated from today's observations," said Captain J. A. Hoogwerff, superintendent of the naval observatory.

The eclipse was of value chiefly in correcting the world's time, although usually this is so precisely calculated from the movements of the stars that it doesn't vary the slightest fraction of a second.

Time is tallied by clocks kept in a sealed vault at the naval observatory in Washington, in which the temperature does not change the tenth part of a degree during the entire year, and it is not expected that the observations of the eclipse today will necessitate re-setting of these clocks.

The scientific world is looking forward to a total eclipse of the sun which will be visible in the United States for a few minutes on February 3, 1916, weather permitting. No important eclipses are scheduled to take place before that time.

First Photograph of the War in Servia

This is the first photograph of action in the conflict between Austria and Servia, the war which involved all Europe in the greatest struggle of history. The Servian soldiers here shown are half buried in a trench. Through a field of growing wheat they are firing on a body of Austrians a half mile off. Reports from Servia are to the effect that they have driven the Austrians from their country and that they will take the offensive. This fact may be due to the assault of Russia on the Austrian frontier. The Austrians may have withdrawn their troops to fight the stronger enemy.

THIS STORY IS MOST UNUSUAL

While students together at West Point and in love with the same girl, Sumpter Love proves Hugo Loubeque a thief, and Loubeque is dishonorably discharged. Love wins the girl. The emity thus begun finds outlet in later years at Manila, when a butler thief in the employ of Loubeque, now an international spy, steals valuable papers from the government safe of General Love. Loubeque sails with them on the steamship Empress and General Love accuses Lieutenant Gibson, his aide, and the sweetheart of his daughter Lucille, of the crime.

Loubeque sends a wireless message cleverly insinuating that General Love had sold the papers to a foreign power. To save the honor of the man she loved and to erase the stigma from her father's name, Lucille determines to recover the papers.

Following the Empress in a hydro-aeroplane, Lucille lands on the steamship, and during the excitement when fire is reported, procures the papers. The Empress is lost, and Lucille is cast upon an island, where she makes friends with the natives. After numerous thrilling escapes, Lucille wanders into the jungle, where she is threatened by wild beasts.

Further adventures of Lucille Love will be portrayed at the Orpheus tonight.

Montana Women Are Latest After the Vote

United Press Service

BUTTE, Mont., Aug. 21.—That woman suffrage will carry two to one when the constitutional amendment providing for equal suffrage is put before the voters of Montana at the November election is the prediction made by the women at the head of the suffrage movement here.

In the opinion of chairmen of political parties, this estimate is somewhat high, but they admit that the amendment is likely to carry by a big majority.

Headed by Jeannette Rankin, former field secretary of the National Suffrage Association, the women of Montana are conducting a whirlwind campaign which will not end until the votes are cast in November.

Miss Rankin, a Missoula, Mont., girl, resigned her position as field secretary of the national organization in New York last winter to accept the chairmanship of the Montana Equal Suffrage Association.
