

German Army Is Forty Miles From France's Capital

United Press Service
PARIS, Sept. 3.—It is considered certain that the allies will be compelled to retire to Paris' fortifications. Already there is discussion as to the final line of occupation.

The next forty-eight hours will decide the fate of Paris. The military is in complete control of the city today. The forts are all manned, and the city is under martial law.

As far as outward indications go, the final line will be advantageous to the allies. Roughly sketched, it will take the form of a "Z," extending southeast to near La Fere, and the other points at Rheims, Meziere and Verdun.

Experts say such a line gives the allies material advantage in being entrenched with the angles supported by fortified positions.

This will compel the Germans to divide the forces and move against places having the greatest natural strength.

Despite the transfer of the capital to Bordeaux, the situation at the front is improving. The ferocity of the German assault on the allies left is diminishing, and it is insisted that the allies position is much stronger than it was three days ago.

French troops have been sent there from the extreme right of the line. It is officially announced that a German aeroplane trying to bomb Paris was shot down near Compiègne, and two German officers killed.

It is believed that the invaders will strike at the northern line of forts. The Germans are within forty miles of here, but officials insist it will be impossible to isolate this city.

In Russian Poland only a part of the line is holding, with enormous Russian reinforcements arriving.

As a result of the great fight five Austrian corps were practically annihilated, reserve ammunition captured and thousands taken prisoners.

First and Second Defenses of Paris and Lines of Rapid German March

There is no doubt in the minds of military experts that the rapid invasion of France by the German armies will cause alarm in the French capital within a few days. The French and English armies are believed to have fallen back on the first line of French defense—the forts extending from Calais on the north to Belfort on the south, including twelve or thirteen great fortresses as shown on the map, and some 140 fortified places of less military value. At this time, so far as can be learned from contradictory dispatches, there are four armies in France, all moving toward Paris. The far northern army swung north in Belgium after leaving Brussels, and was said to have taken Lille, which was supposed to be protected by forts much stronger than those at Liege. Another army had taken Namur and was heading for Paris. The third had crossed the border near Longwy and was pushing on. A fourth army had taken Nancy, it was reported, and was well in French territory. In addition there was believed to be a large army near Colmar in Alsace, made up of Austrians to the number of 100,000 and Germans. The intention of the commander of that force would undoubtedly be to move across the border as soon as French troops were withdrawn from Alsace. These advances continued successfully for any length of time would mean the allies must fall back on the second line of fortifications—the forts running from Amiens, fifty miles north of Paris, around to Le Fere, Laon, Rheims, Chalons and on to Langres.

Officers Search for the Corpse After Sweating Williams

Before many hours elapse there is reason to believe that the body of Al McLeod, missing since August 22, will be located.

Early in the day, Frank Williams, who is held in connection with the disappearance, was taken into the sheriff's office, and was "sweated" for some time.

Late this afternoon Sheriff Low, District Attorney Irwin and others left in automobiles for the McLeod homestead, carrying picks, shovels and gun boots.

Regarding the developments at the questioning of Williams, the authorities remained silent today. Williams' voice, in hysterical tones, was heard outside the sheriff's office though his words were inaudible, and when he was returned to his cell, wracked with sobs, he was extremely weak, and clung to officers for support.

Although the officers refuse to talk, it seems certain that Williams made some admission that shows that he at least knows where the body is.

And there is reason to believe from this that the prisoner may have confessed to the killing of McLeod, holding that he did so in self defense, and that he buried the body and took possession of the ranch in the hope of convincing people that McLeod left.

That "Scotty" McLeod, whose whereabouts have not been discovered since a week ago last Sunday, August 22, has met with foul play seems practically established.

After putting Frank Williams, who was arrested on suspicion Tuesday, through a rigid examination this morning, it was certain that he has confessed to at least an implication in the doing away with McLeod. While the sheriff has refused to discuss the results of the examination at all, the actions of Williams while returning to the jail plainly showed that he had made a confession of some sort, and that he was throwing himself on the mercy of the officials. He showed signs of having wept, and clung to the sheriff all the way to the jail.

It was discovered Wednesday by the sheriff and deputy that an unknown person had been traveling back and forth from the McLeod place about the time McLeod disappeared. This man kept away from the farm in that district, and up to today the office has been unable to discover who this man is. His actions at the time in seeming to make it a point to keep away from everybody aroused the suspicions of several who have since recalled his presence there.

The case as it stands at present is that McLeod has not been seen in this city or at his place since Sunday evening, August 22. At that time he was seen in company with Williams on the way to the ranch by several farmers living in that neighborhood. Afterwards Williams stated that the man with him was not McLeod, but a hobo he had picked up to go to work on the Drury place. Investigation shows that no such man went to work for Drury.

About 9 o'clock Sunday night, August 23, a man named Huntington and another farmer stopped at the McLeod place. Williams was there alone, as far as they knew.

The floor was wet, and Williams explained that McLeod had broken a bottle of whiskey on the floor, and had also spilled a bucket of water, and that he had just cleaned it up. These men say, however, that the floor had been scrubbed exceptionally clean.

Williams was very excited at this time. He also told the visitors that McLeod had taken his bed and gone to the Drury place to go to work for him.

The sheriff's office has been unable to obtain any information that McLeod was in this city on Monday, April 24, as Williams states he was. Several people have stated that he was here, but none were sure of the date, according to the officials. That he was here the Saturday before is certain.

If McLeod has been done away with it was between the time he reached home with Williams on Sunday and 9 o'clock that night, when Huntington and the other farmer stopped at the ranch. No positive proof has been found that he was seen after that.

It is not believed that McLeod was made away with without a struggle of some sort. It is known that both "Scotty" and Williams are of quick temper. Appearances, while not conclusive, would indicate a fight of some nature had taken place at the McLeod house.

A row of sunflowers which stood just outside the door were more or less trampled down. Blotches on these, plainly visible, despite the fact

DUNCAN DREW UP THE INFORMATION

JUSTICE OF THE PEACE SAYS THAT INSTEAD OF IRWIN'S OFFICE BEING IGNORED, IT PREPARED THE PAPER

"The morning paper was misinformed by someone regarding the procedure resulting in the issuance of a warrant for the arrest of Frank Williams," said Justice of the Peace N. W. Gowen today. "The paper stated that Prosecuting Attorney John Irwin said he 'knew nothing of the case, although he was the proper official to whom Morgan should have first gone.' "Now, the fact of the matter is that the information on which I issued the warrant of arrest was prepared by the district attorney's office. It shows its endorsement that it was drawn up by Irwin's deputy, W. M. Duncan."

ARGUMENTS FOR AND AGAINST THE ROAD FROM ENTERPRISE TRACT TO WHEELER RANCH HEARD IN COURT

The proposed county road from the Enterprise Tracts to the Wheeler ranch is not to be secured without a struggle. This was shown Wednesday afternoon, when C. W. Miller appeared to make formal protest.

Through Attorney J. C. Rutanic, Miller alleged that the people in that vicinity were not posted regarding the road's location, as the typewritten description on the notices faded when exposed to the elements.

Venitian Cardinal Is Chosen as the Pope

(Rome Correspondent United Press) ROME, Sept. 3.—Cardinal Della Chiesa, was today chosen as pope, succeeding the late Pius X. He was elected on the ninth ballot taken by the College of Cardinals.

Fifty-seven cardinals participated in the conclave. The new pontiff has chosen the name of Benedictus XV. His coronation date will be set later.

The election of Della Chiesa is a tribute to the late pontiff and Cardinal del Val. He was assistant secretary of state, under the pontiff, and later cardinal and archbishop of Venice. Prior to that time the new pope was archbishop of Bologna. Pope Benedictus XIV, elected in 1740, was also archbishop of Bologna. The new pontiff is a strong fan of "modernism." Early in the present year he issued a strong condemnation of the tango and other modern dances of that type.

It was while detained on the cartel ship that Key watched the bombardment of Fort Mifflin and was inspired to write "The Star Spangled Banner."
