THE DAWN OF PROSPERITY

THE Optimist is coming into his own. The dawn of prosperity is in sight, and the beacon that lights the way to greater activity becomes brighter day by day.

Manufacturers of the United States are receiving many inquiries from over the seas from great firms who are looking to us for goods which heretofore they have purchased in Europe.

Unless all signs fail they will accumulate and swell and assume greater proportions, until our fair land is one hive of humming industry, with work in plenty for all, and a spirit of peace and contentment resting upon the land.

In years gone by the allies have bought from the Germans and the Austrians, and the latter have purchased from the former and from each other. It was an interchangeable system of commerce.

But the bitterness engendered by the war is effecting a vast and mighty change.

All are turning to America for their wares until Europe recovers from its paralysis.

From South America comes the cry for goods—more goods—and plenty of them. This trade in the past has been given to Europe, but the nations at war have practically no merchant ships upon the seas, and are unable to supply the demand.

Once this commerce of South America is secured by the United States it is doubtful if it could be wrested from us by any other means than force of arms, and that, of course, would not come until the warring nations have recovered from their physical and financial exhaustion, although eventually that is the inevitable with which we will be forced to contend.

But in the meantime we will manufacture goods and ship them to the nations of the world, and gold will pour in to us, and the laborer will have steady employment and the farmer will have better markets for his products, and the business man will feel such prosperity as he has not known for many years.

It will not come in a day, or a week, or in a month. But it will assume greater proportions, step by step, until we have reached the pinnacle of a nation's prosperity.

F. E. Smith, Chief of British Press Bureau

When the war started became dangerous in England and it was decided to have a press bureau to pass out information to the newspapers, and keep them from publishing anything that was not authorized, the liberal government picked out F. E. Smith, one of the important unionists, or opposition leaders, for the place.

Notice

Owing to the fact that an active campaign for the office of the clerk of the circuit court interferes too largely with my school work, and because of this work, I am prevented from entering the campaign and doing justice to it, to my friends and my supporters, I wish to announce that I will not enter the race as was intended.

IF KIDNEYS AND BLADDER BOTHER

TAKE SALTS TO FLUSH KIDNEYS AND NEUTRALIZE IRRITATING ACIDS

Kidney and bladder weakness result from uric acid, says a noted authority. The kidneys filter this acid from the blood and pass it on to the bladder, where it often remains to irritate and inflame, causing a burning, scalding sensation, or setting up an irritation at the neck of the bladder, obliging you to seek relief two or three times during the night.

Bladder weakness, most folks call it, because they can't control urination. While it is extremely annoying and sometimes very painful, this is really one of the most simple ailments to overcome. Get about four ounces of Jad Salts from your pharmacist and take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast; continue this for two or three days. This will neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer is a source of irritation to the bladder and urinary organs, which then act normally again.

Jad salts is inexpensive, harmless, and is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and is used by thousands of folks who are subject to urinary disorders caused by uric acid irritation. Jad Salts is splendid for kidneys and causes no bad effects whatever.

Here you have a pleasant, effervescent lithia-water drink which quickly relieves bladder trouble. (Advertisement)

Case Parallel to Arant Fight Decided in Favor of Officer

District Court of Appeals Holds Man Removed From Civil Service Position for Political Reasons Was Wronged

The following clipping from a Washington (D. C.) paper brings to light another case like that of W. Frank Arant, removed from the superintendency of Crater Lake National Park by the federal marshal, on orders from the department of the interior. Arant refused to resign, holding that he was a civil service appointee, and could not be removed unless charges had been filed against him, and he had been given a chance to answer them.

Arant's stand was also taken by the Civil Service Commission and the National Civil Service Commission.

The clipping follows:

The removal of Samuel T. Kalbfus as an assistant assessor of the District of Columbia is illegal and void, and the attempted appointment of his successor a mere nullity, according to the decision of the District court of appeals just rendered. Justice Robb, speaking for the court, declared the office had never been vacant, and in contemplation of law "the relator has never been out of his office, but, in fact, he has been, and now is, being illegally excluded from it."

Declaring mandamus to be the most adequate remedy to restore Mr. Kalbfus to his rights, the court directs that the judgment of Justice Barnard of the District supreme court be reversed and the cause remanded for further proceedings.

Justice Barnard held that the commissioners had discretion as to the removal of a member of the board, and having acted within that discretion, the court would not review the action.

Justice Robb sustains the contention of Attorney Frank J. Hogan for the assistant assessor that the oath of office taken before the assessor by one of his assistants is valid. Even if invalid, the court suggests, the commissioners having allowed Mr. Kalbfus to serve under it for many years may not be hard to attack it.

The right of the commissioners to remove a member of the board of assistant assessors was curtailed, the court finds, by the act of 1902, prohibiting removal except for causes mentioned. By this act notice and hearing before the tribunal charged with the duty of according it and of determining the issues became requisite, the court holds, to the exercise of jurisdiction.

"The fact that the conduct of an official may have been the subject of inquiry," says Justice Robb, "before another tribunal does not relieve of its duty the tribunal charged by law with according a hearing before removing him."

The commissioners claimed that it was unnecessary to try Kalbfus, since a committee of congress had found that he had engaged in real estate speculation while a member of the board of assessors. Without passing on the right of the present board of commissioners to review the finding of their predecessors, the court declares it is certain they had no power to review that finding without notice to Mr. Kalbfus. This could no more be done, the court suggests, than could the former board, after two years had elapsed, have reopened the case and reversed their finding without notice to him.

"When the defendants passed their order of removal," continues Justice Robb, "the relator was in the actual and legal possession of his office. Congress having explicitly withdrawn from the commissioners the power of removal except for specified causes, notice and hearing were essential requisites to remove at all. Since their order of removal was passed without notice and hearing, it necessarily follows that their action constituted an arbitrary exercise of power, and was void."

August 18 last Mr. Kalbfus received a letter from the commissioners offering him an opportunity to resign from the service of the District. He declined, and on the next day the commissioners passed an order removing him and naming Edward W. Oyster as his successor. Mr. Kalbfus acknowledged the receipt of the dismissal order, but notified the authorities that he claimed the office and stood ready to perform the functions of the office if not prevented. The order to return to work was ignored, and Mr. Kalbfus had recourse to the courts.

It is considered probable in view of the recent decision that Mr. Kalbfus will be entitled to pay for the time he has been excluded from the office. The court holds the office has never been vacant, and that Mr. Kalbfus has been both in law and in fact a member of the board of assistant assessors.

Commissioner Newman was informed of the Kalbfus decision by a reporter. He declined to comment on it until he has seen a copy of Justice Robb's ruling. The commissioner said that he would probably call a meeting of the full board of District heads for the purpose of considering what action will be taken in the matter. The office of the assessor of the District is under Commissioner Newman's personal supervision.
