New Game Laws Go Into Effect Today

United Press Service

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 1.—Amendments to the department of agriculture's regulations for protection of migratory birds, published today, became effective today.

The effect of one of the changes is to permit on the Missouri and the upper waters of the Mississippi the shooting of all migratory game birds for which there is an open season from October 1, 1934, to January 1, 1935. After the latter date the prohibition will be in force again. Other amendments deal principally with the closed season for water fowl in the various localities.

The new regulations provide for a closed season for water fowl in the water fowl from December 16 to September 1 next following. Exceptions to the rule prescribe the open season as follows:

In Massachusetts and Rhode Island, beginning January 1 and October 1; Connecticut, New York, Pennsylvania, Idaho, Oregon and Washington, between January 16 and October 1; New Jersey between February 1 and November 1; Minnesota, North Dakota and Wisconsin, between December 1 and September 7.

For some No. 2 the closed season is between January 16 and October 1, with the following exceptions:

Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia, Virginia, North Carolina, Alabama, Mississippi, and Louisiana, between February 1 and November 1; Florida, Georgia and South Carolina, between February 16 and November 20; Kansas, Missouri and Oklahoma, between February 1 and September 15; Texas, Arizona and California, between February 1 and October 15.

PARIS, Oct. 1.—Here is a touching picture by a French soldier now in hospital in Nancy. Writing to a friend two days after the battle of Saales Pass (Vosges), close to a spot where the first German flag was captured, he says:

"Do you know why I feel strangely moved just now? I was thinking of the service at church Sunday. The whole company went inside in the early morning, and we found the priest there. The church contains a beautiful organ, and Lieutenant S., who knows I am fond of music, asked the priest for permission for me to try the instrument, so I sat down, while all my comrades ranged themselves in the pews.

"I began with the Marseillaise, then the Russian and British National Anthems. After that I played a movement from Massenet; one of Mendelssohn's songs without words; a Romance by Schumann; the Largo in G, by Handel, which profoundly touched the audience; Gounod's 'Ave Marie'; and finally my own inimitable 'Chant du Depart'.

After that the priest offered a prayer for our armies, and as we left the church the hearts of all of us were very full. That night we entered Alsace and our one thought was,

"We must give them a licking." If I am spared (for I hope to be back to the front before long) I want to give a concert in the Strasbourg cathedral."

LONDON, Oct. 1.—When the British made their gallant stand against the German advance at Mons, the Middlesex regiment was once again heroically unfortunate. The regiment, which was originally composed of Londoners from the Middlesex militia, once carried the unfattering name of "Steelbacks," because the men were accustomed to being flogged into order.

It was at the fight at Albuera, during the Peninsular war that they displayed their extraordinary bulldog fighting capacity. Out of twenty-five officers, no fewer than twenty-two were killed and wounded, and 570 of the rank and file were put out of action. It was when the struggle was most sanguinary that the colonel yelled out in encouragement, "Die hard, men, die hard!" Since that time the Middlesex men have been known admiringly as the "Die hards."

MOVING PICTURES

"The Lady of the Island," the two reel special shown at the Orpheus last night proved to be a production far above the average, and was greeted with rounds of applause. This offering features a Scotch colt with perfect forms with almost human understanding. Chas. Hutchinson scored a decided hit with his monologue, as did the two young ladies with their duet. "Snookie's Filtration," a Ford Sterling comedy, and "Passing the Love of Women," completed the picture program, which will be repeated this evening.
