Read What the Mutual Girl and Auntie Have to Say on This Page

Lucille—Auntie, dear, do you know that there is a druggist advertising upon this page that has one of the best equipped stores in this country?
Auntie—Whom do you refer to, Lucille?
Lucille—Why, Auntie, it is the Star Drug Store. I was in there today for some little things in toilet articles, and Mr. Kinnear, the manager, was telling me that the state inspector told him that he had the second best place in the state. Why, do you know, Auntie, all of the help in the Star Drug Store must wear nice clean white coats, and everything is so spick and span that it looks like they had just moved in, but Mr. Kinnear said, "You may come in at any time, morning, noon or night, and you will always find it the same."
Auntie—Well, Lucille, I am going down there today. I have a very favorite prescription that I want filled. I usually send it back East, but if you think I can get it filled properly there with GOOD, PURE DRUGS I will go there.
Lucille—Now, Auntie, Mr. Kinnear, the manager, made it a special point to tell me that nothing went into a prescription that they filled in the Star Drug Store but the very best and purest drugs that money could buy, and that it was filled just as the doctor ordered it by men who were very competent—in fact all men employed there are registered pharmacists, and the people could feel very sure that it must be exactly right.
Auntie—Well, they may have my trade, for that's what I want. I am willing to pay the price, and expect the best when it comes to medicine, for I know many times I have gotten drugs that were not what they ought to be from unscrupulous men who were out for the dollar and would give you most any old thing.
Moral—If you deal with the Star Drug Store, who is advertising upon this page regularly, you will receive exactly what you ought to receive, as the doctor ordered it, and put up by experienced pharmacists.
